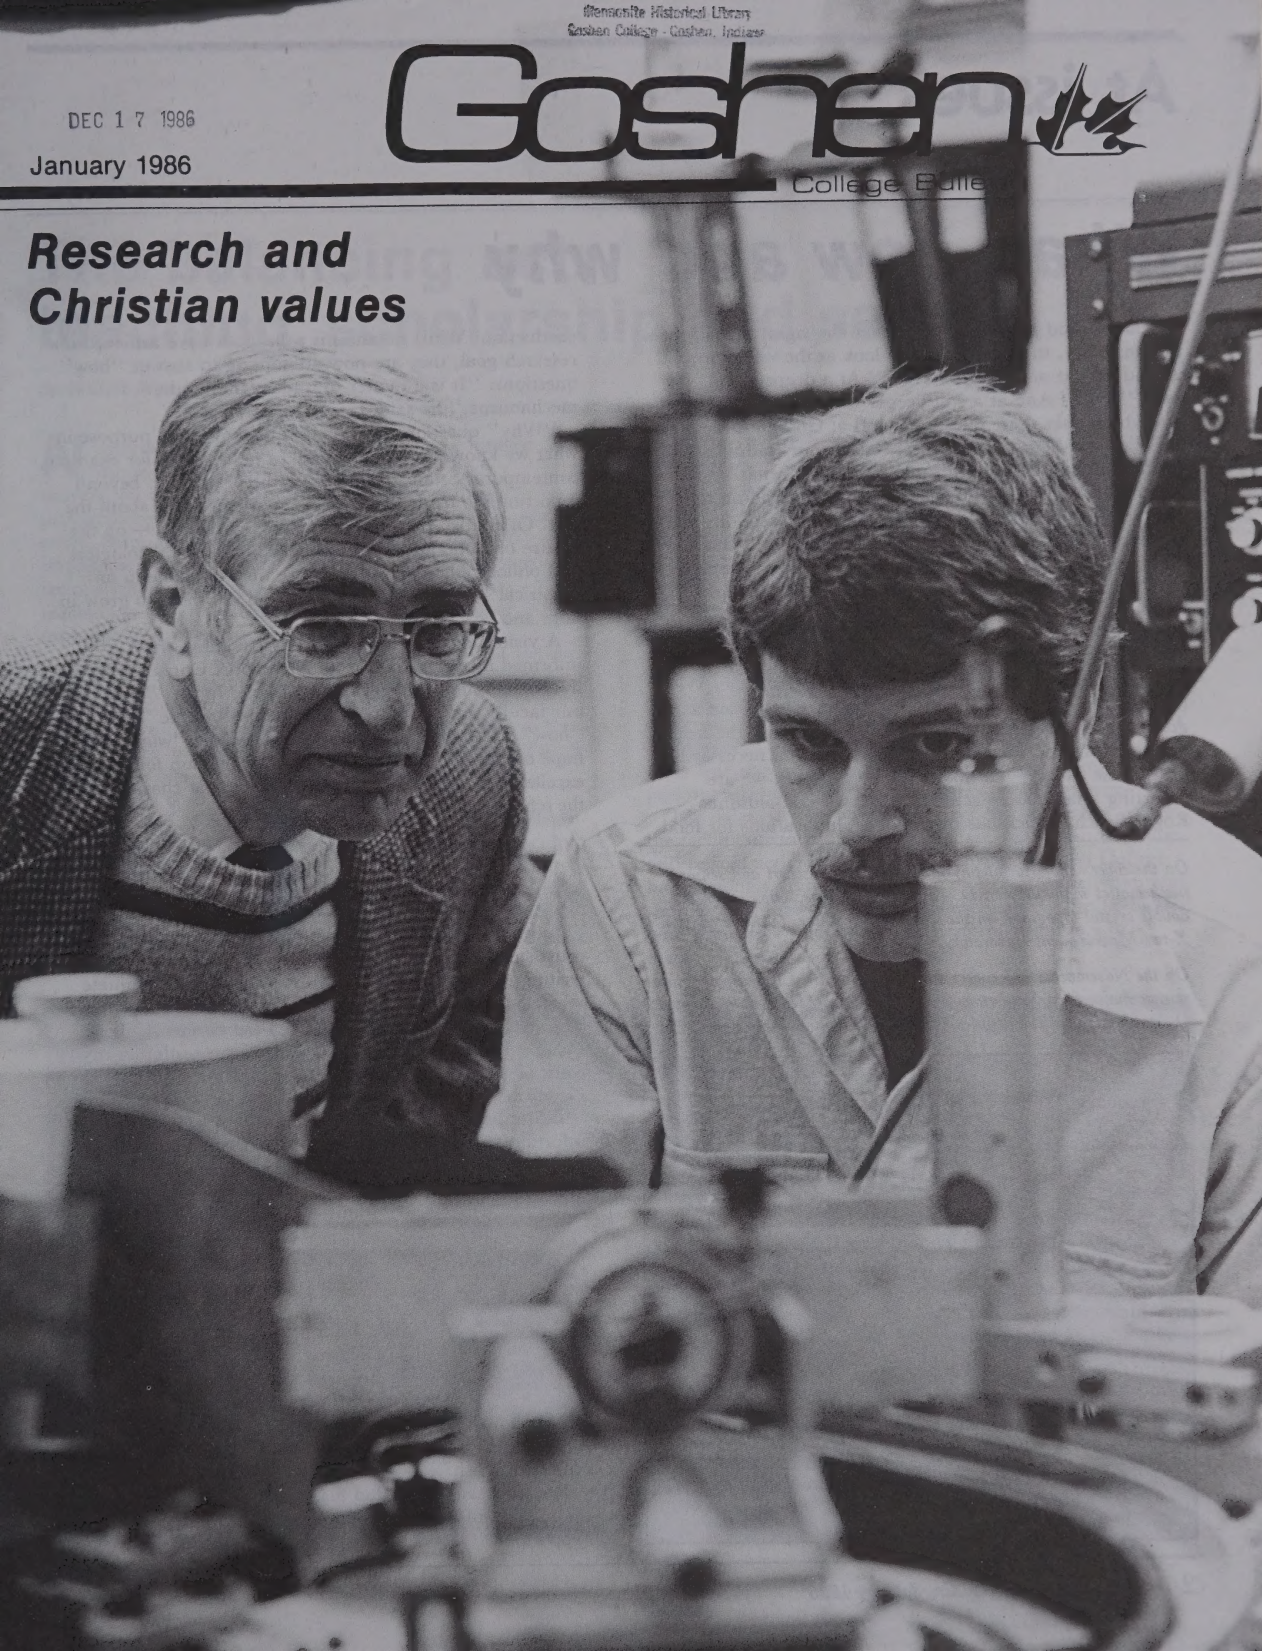
Research and Christian values



At issue

What, how and why

Scholars and journalists both have the right, indeed the responsibility, to be curious. We look at the world around us and ask, at one level, "What?" At a deeper level, we ask, "How?" And at a still deeper level, we ask "Why?" Everybody asks these questions, and at Goshen College we strive to ask them in a way that reflects our tradition.

Students come to us with many of their "what" questions already answered. So the faculty members build on that knowledge and work at counteracting misperceptions and guiding students to a deeper understanding of "what." They generally discover that the world is more complex than it might have seemed. Students learn, for example, that although thinkers have reflected on human beings' biological nature for centuries, what we know is limited and continually changing.

The "how" questions present a greater challenge. We can observe a great deal with our human senses (and a great deal more when we extend our senses with the help of instruments), but careful observation does not necessarily answer the "how?" In this Bulletin on page 9, we are reporting a fascinating scientific discovery by alumnus Roger Beachy which has tremendous implications for food production. While he and his colleagues have achieved one research goal, they are now attempting to answer "how" questions: "It is a matter of understanding the mechanisms," he said.

"Why" questions help us find meaning and purpose in what we know and understand. In journalism, for example, contemporary standards obligate the press to go beyond reporting the truth factually to report the truth about the fact. Of course, the ultimate "why" questions — on the nature of God and the meaning of life — are theological and philosophical. While they are unanswerable in an empirical sense, we must continue to ask them to grow in faith and wisdom.

A vision for discovery and understanding which is informed by our values as an Anabaptist Christian people lives at Goshen College. As the articles in this Bulletin attest, our faculty and students have gone beyond the "what" and "how" to bring their values to bear on the "why." We hope our readers will gain a new appreciation for the quiet excellence in research and performance that characterizes the scholars on our campus. —SWS

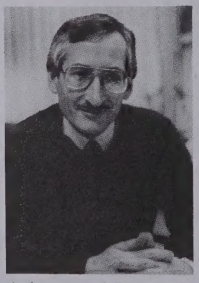
. . . And the who

Journalists and scholars, as they exercise their curiosity, must stop asking questions periodically to get on with their writing and teaching. They must publically disseminate what someone has called "the best version of the truth." That has been my goal as editor of the Goshen College Bulletin, off and on since 1980. Now I am resuming my work as a full-time teacher and head of the Communication Department.

Editing the Bulletin as the incoming director of information services will be John D. Yoder, who held this position on an interim basis in 1981-82. He brings substantial additional experience to the position as a free-lance writer and photographer. Since 1983 he has also directed the continuing education program.



John graduated from Goshen College in 1965 with a B.A. in English, studied at Goshen Biblical Seminary, and holds an M.A. from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, and Ph.D. from the University of Iowa, Iowa City, both in English.

Best wishes to John and his colleagues as they interpret the mission of Goshen College to its thousands of loyal supporters. —SWS

The balancing act: teaching, scholarship and service

By Willard Martin

Numerous articles have been written and countless arguments have been waged at colleges and universities over the relationship between teaching, performance and research and the effect of one upon the other. Some faculty and administrators hold that it is impossible to teach effectively if one is not also engaged in serious scholarly pursuits. Others are convinced that teaching is sure to be slighted by professors who are thoroughly involved in research.

One can easily cite examples on either side of the debate to support an opinion, but no consistent factual evidence shows that competence in research necessarily has a correlation with competence in teaching. The effects of these two activities appear to vary considerably among professors. While some manage to excel in both areas, others are ineffective in both.

A third area of faculty activity, an area in which colleges and universities are making increasing demands on faculty, is service to the profession, the institution, the community, and, as is the case at Goshen College, to the church. In every strong liberal arts college, the faculty inevitably feels some degree of tension over the demands of teaching, research and service.

In a survey recently conducted among faculty in a variety of colleges and universities by Kenneth E. Eble and Wilbert J. McKeachie (Improving Undergraduate Education Through Faculty Development, Jossey-Bass, 1985, p. 165), 54 percent of the respondents expressed concern over the conflicts in these three areas. Although the emphasis shifts from one institution to another and even among faculty in the same institution, some degree of tension is common.

Ideally, professors everywhere publish because they feel an inner compulsion to do so and because they gain intrinsic satisfaction from sharing the results of their scholarly pursuits with others — not because of external requirements or institutional pressure. The best incentive is enjoyment in doing it. Unfortunately, though, faculty are often frustrated by the lack of time, energy and resources to perform adequately in teaching, scholarship and service.

The balancing act goes on at Goshen College too. While the faculty obviously place the highest priority on teaching and related activities, especially advising, Goshen College has a strong tradition of research and creative activities and service. Fortunately, Goshen College continues to be blessed with professors who manage to perform admirably in teaching as well as in other areas.

John Oyer (above) edits The Mennonite Quarterly Review*, a significant research journal. Students have ample opportunities to perform publicly, as actors Fred Redekop and Naomi Kroeker did in Tennessee Williams'* The Glass Menagerie*.*

Faculty in a number of academic disciplines not only provide excellent scholarly models for their students, but they also contribute to the overall academic environment of the college. Conducting research and creating works of art or music or literature on a college campus are also forms of teaching.

Growing competition for research funds, heavy workloads and new expectations in service are combining to make it increasingly difficult for faculty at Goshen College who wish to be active in the three areas of teaching, scholarship and service. Stringent budgets resulting from recent declines in enrollment and rising operational costs have made it difficult for the college to play its role as well as desired in the balancing act. Every dean needs a discretionary fund to provide released time to faculty from certain activities and to assist them in implementing good ideas for the benefit of the institution.

It is a fallacy to assume that all faculty can perform equally well in all areas of teaching, scholarship and service. The balancing act requires that faculty be allowed to concentrate more on developing their knowledge and skills in areas for which they are best suited and in areas in which they can perform most effectively for the students, the institution and their own professional development.

Revisions keep Weldy's nursing text current

By Lois Landis Kurowski

Norma Jean Weldy really didn't set out to write a textbook 20 years ago. She wrote the first two chapters of Body Fluids and Electrolytes for a summer class in programmed learning at Ball State University in 1965 and kept writing when she returned to Goshen.

However, the project resulted in the nursing professor's creating a "Cinderella" textbook. Published by the C.V. Mosby Co. of St. Louis, Weldy's textbook has sold at least 80,000 copies.

Weldy really didn't intend to publish a book either. At first, she simply had the manuscript reproduced for use in her classes, revising it when it seemed necessary. One day a textbook salesman from Mosby saw it in the Goshen College Bookstore and asked Weldy if she'd be interested in preparing it for publication.

The first Mosby edition came out in 1972, complete with illustrations drawn by the author herself. (She hired an artist for the three subsequent editions.) No figures are available for sales of the first edition, but since the second edition in 1976, the book has sold at least 8,000 to 9,000 copies annually. The fourth edition was published in 1984. It has also been published in Spanish.

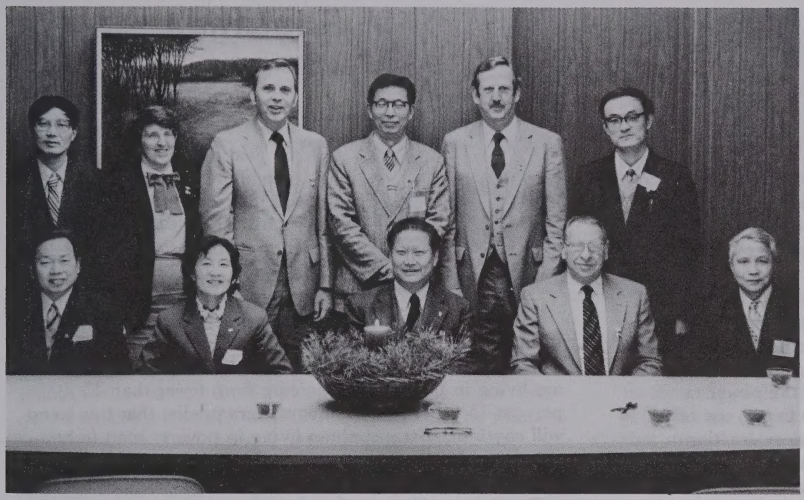
Since the first edition, knowledge about body fluids and electrolytes has grown substantially, Weldy said, which means revisions for every edition. Because revision takes so much work, she asks the company to notify her a year in advance for a revision. Mosby has just asked her to prepare a fifth edition.

Writing a textbook is not easy because the author must look at a topic from the student's point of view, Weldy said. Programmed learning texts are particularly difficult because they're designed to allow students to learn at their own pace. The author must give complete information, and the questions must proceed logically from that information. "The hardest thing is not to make assumptions about what students already know," she said.

Oddly, Weldy was not a specialist in the field of electrolytes and body fluids when she set out to write a text. However, because of the extensive research necessary to keep her book current, she has become an expert and has given workshops on the subject.

Weldy does receive an annual income from the book ("it helps out"), and other nursing teachers and nurses sometimes recognize her name from having used the book.

Writing Body Fluids and Electrolytes also enabled Weldy to be promoted to full professor, although she does not have a doctoral degree, because it involved at least as much effort. As she noted, few dissertations have been completely revised and rewritten four times in 20 years.



Sichuan educators visit campus

Five education officials from Sichuan Province, People's Republic of China, visited campus Dec. 11-13 to discuss the GC-Sichuan educational exchange. They toured the campus, Goshen General Hospital and Heritage Middle School, Middlebury. They also were feted at two campus banquets. China Educational Exchange sponsored their visit.

Home economics circles gain Mumaw's insights

Catherine R. Mumaw is a VIHE — Very Important Home Economist.

As the United States' representative to the executive committee of the International Federation for Home Economics, the Goshen College professor of home economics is the voice of approximately 35,000 home economists who belong to the American Home Economics Association, a professional association.

People seem to understand the role professional associations such as the American Medical Association and the American Bar Association play in their members' professional lives. However, many do not realize the importance professional associations can have for scholars, particularly those who teach at small colleges.

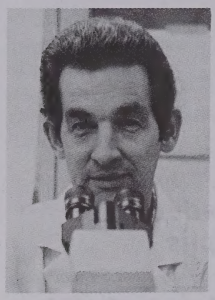
Mumaw especially appreciates the benefits — and burdens — of being active in professional associations. Work for the IFHE and AHEA occupies much of her "free" time on weekends and evenings, and she spends more than 20 days attending meetings annually (and quite a bit of her own money). She will travel to Bristol, England, and Graz, Austria, for IFHE meetings in 1986.

Being active in professional associations benefits both the college and the faculty member, Mumaw believes. Her own activities have raised awareness of the GC home economics program and helped Mumaw build a "support network" of fellow home economists and a resource base of teaching materials.

Professional meetings are especially beneficial for teachers at small colleges who may feel isolated from the mainstream of their discipline. "There's a kind of stimulus and challenge that comes from meeting others in your own field," Mumaw said. GC's international orientation and the Mennonite perspective — particularly the "more-with-less" movement — enable her to make a valuable contribution at the international level. Several of the 84 nations represented in the IFHE are Third World nations. "I give to them a perspective that is often unique," Mumaw said.

She urges young faculty members not to join professional associations strictly for their own benefit. "They should ask themselves, 'What can I give them?' " she said. "Being active in a professional association is an investment for growth. What you get is in proportion to what you give."

Research and Christia



Natural science

By Stanley N. Grove

Since the dawn of human consciousness, we have been challenged to discover new information about the natural order. This challenge has stimulated our curiosity and motivated our explorations.

When we decide to commit our lives to Christ and receive the Holy Spirit as a guide, we do not lose our inquisitiveness or the desire to understand. Ideally, we as Christians give up our human desire for the power to control other people and instead become free to use all of our resources to work together as we explore creation.

Christians who have rejected power-hungry ways still can find joy and satisfaction in using their powers of observation to contribute to the welfare of the universe. Unfortunately, some Christians fail to appreciate the role of scientific research in increasing our ability to live in harmony with the created order. Through research, we are beginning to understand that our greediness often causes great harm and destruction to the environment on which life depends.

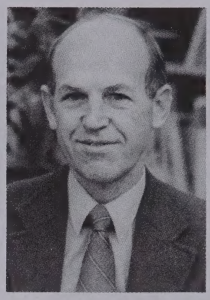
Contrary to the views of some, scientific research and the information it provides are neither good nor bad in themselves. True, morally corrupt humans may choose to use the power of scientific understanding for immoral purposes. But powerful information can be equally effective at providing the means to peace and harmony.

God needs to have Christian people involved in all levels of science and technology — some discovering scientific principles, others guiding their development into life-affirming instruments and still others applying these powerful instruments to the stewardship of the created order.

The concept of Christian servanthood should include scientific research. Service should not be limited to those professions which apply knowledge to the problems of individuals. In addition, service might mean discovering the scientific principles which God is in the process of revealing to the human intellect. Or it might mean developing the information gained into instruments, practices, processes and products which facilitate harmony in the created order.

Mennonite Christians have long advocated the application of scientific knowledge by persons in teaching, health care and business professions. Is it time to give equal encouragements to persons involved in scientific discovery for the glory of God?

Stanley N. Grove, associate professor of biology, is conducting research during a sabbatical leave at the University of Notre Dame.



Education

By John J. Smith

The goal to love God and love neighbors, following the example of Jesus, is a basis for Christian values. For teachers, students are the primary "neighbors"; teaching them effectively is an act of love.

Increasingly, teachers and their "neighbors" are mismatched in their cultural and economic backgrounds. Today 22 percent of Americans younger than 18 years old are living in poverty, an increase from fewer than 15 percent 15 years ago. Demographers predict that this trend will continue. Because those living in poverty tend to be educationally disadvantaged, teaching them can be challenging.

Teachers need more than common sense to work effectively in increasingly challenging and complex settings. They need guidelines that come from careful study and research, which they themselves often have neither time nor training to conduct. Fortunately, research on classroom teaching has improved in the past 15 years.

Recent research has been particularly helpful in areas such as teaching elementary reading in mathematics, classroom management and teacher expectations. However, because teaching and learning are extremely complex, research will never be powerful enough to reduce teaching to a set of prescriptions. Nonetheless, generalizations from research can at least function as guidelines for teachers.

Education professors at Goshen College are committed to incorporating findings from educational research into the teacher education program.

While on sabbatical leave in 1984-85 at the Research and Development Center for Teacher Education at the University of Texas, I participated in research on classroom management and on teacher education. In one project, I studied recent Goshen College graduates who taught in inner-city Houston. The purpose of the study was to identify the major changes they face in inner-city schools and the resources with which they meet those challenges.

This year associate professor Kathy Short is conducting post-doctoral research at Ohio State University on teaching reading to educationally disadvantaged first-graders.

Keeping current with educational research is one way the Education Department seeks to maintain a program that prepares graduates to teach effectively, that is, to love their neighbors.

Professor John J. Smith chairs the Education Department at Goshen College.

Nursing

By Fran Wenger

Nursing research and Christian values fit each other naturally. Human care is the subject matter of nursing, the science and practice of human caring. Christian values are also concerned with caring for and about people, all of whom belong to God.

Research about human care, that is, nursing research, should always be based on Christian values. We must raise questions about research which controls behavior or which limits access to specific kinds of nursing care. We must consider methods of collecting data and disseminating research results to protect personal privacy and respect human beings who are created in the image of God.

We would be remiss in not participating in nursing research because of our Christian values. We have a responsibility as Christians to participate creatively in the systematic study of human health and illnesses.

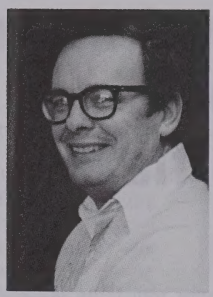
Researchers in nursing find this an exciting time. The profession is becoming more open to new ways of knowing, incorporating metaphysical concerns of humans and human cultures into research.

Some research methods, especially those involving experimentation based on a logical positivist world view, are increasingly being called into question as inappropriate for the study of human care. The concept of causality from the natural sciences is often not appropriate because clear cause-and-effect relationships often cannot be identified in human interactions.

My current research, using ethno-methodology to study care among Old Order Amish as a high-context culture, fits with my Christian values about research involving humans. I believe that people can and do know their world view and belief system. I believe that a participatory mode of research allows me as a researcher to explore with them the meaning of their human expressions and symbols related to health and illness care. Further, I believe that this research can add to the body of knowledge about human care and culture context.

As professors of nursing at Goshen College, we hope to model for and teach our students to accept the challenge of discovering new research methods that reflect Christian values for human life while being valid for understanding human care.

Fran Wenger, associate professor of nursing, is director of the Nursing Division at Goshen College.



Social science

By Duane R. Kauffmann

The social sciences share with the natural sciences the continuing controversy over the role of values and assumptions in the research enterprise. Recent trends suggest, however, that the majority of researchers are converging on agreement that science is not, and cannot be, "value free."

Consequently, social scientists are struggling to develop methodologies that incorporate the reality that empirical activities are fraught with values and assumptions. Given that struggle, it is useful to explore the values which "make a difference" for the Christian.

Perhaps most critical for social scientists are the affirmations which they are willing to make about human beings. Christians value the inherent worth of human individuals and make affirmations involving evil, the presence of a spiritual nature, free will and the meaning and purpose of existence.

Unfortunately, Christian researchers frequently overlook or ignore this value perspective, and Christian assumptions fail to influence the way research is conducted and interpreted. Creative research which incorporates a Christian world view constitutes a challenging frontier for social scientists.

Christians also value the differences present among people, and the diversity of individual traits and gifts is received as an asset to the Christian community. Given this value of human individuality, the research pursuit of statistical significance, where individual differences are passively treated as "error variance," raises a serious methodological challenge for the believer.

Finally, I believe that Christian researchers have the responsibility to use their values, skills and commitment in the pursuit of knowledge which will be of use to the believing community. In fulfilling this role, the Christian researcher must investigate theories and practices borrowed from the secular sphere.

Specifically, research is urgently needed to address contemporary "pop" social science and the psychological/sociological agendas of various "pressure groups" in the religious community. Christian social scientists, by using their value commitments in research, can make an important contribution to the Christian community.

Physics team searches for silicon chip flaws

By Lois Landis Kurowski

Ask Goshen College students to name something small, and they might mention the city of Goshen, their room or their bank balances. For the last 15 years, however, dozens of GC math and physics majors have discovered just how small "small" can be in the Turner Precision X-ray Measurements Laboratory.

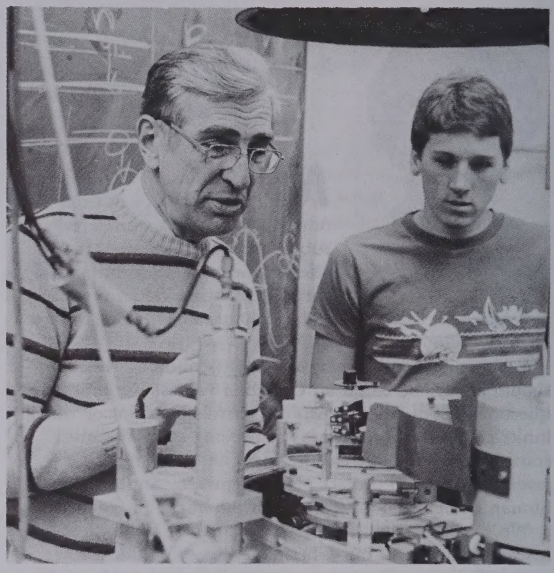
Dedicated in 1970, the laboratory on the east side of the Science Building's first level houses a double-source, double-crystal spectrometer designed by Robert C. Buschert, laboratory director and professor of physics. The Basil S. Turner Foundation funded the lab.

The spectrometer measures the distance between layers of atoms in crystals "at extremely high sensitivities" by the X-ray diffraction technique, Buschert explained. An X-ray beam is aimed at the crystal, and tiny changes in the angle (parts per billion) at which the crystal reflects the beam are measured.

The development of powerful "supercomputers" requires micro-miniature circuits to perform billions of calculations per second. To develop such computers, manufacturers must develop ways to put many more transistors on a computer chip, which in turn requires the sort of structural investigations undertaken in the Turner Laboratory. Cramming more and more transistors onto chips means that tiny flaws in the structure of the material can cause huge failures. The Turner Laboratory's spectrometer can detect just such flaws.

Since Turner Laboratory opened, Buschert has worked with teams of undergraduates to analyze silicon crystals for these flaws. Funded by AT&T's Bell Laboratories, the physics professor and his assistants have been analyzing silicon samples into which Bell Labs have purposely introduced impurities to compensate for the strains caused by other impurities necessarily already in the silicon. The crystal slices, on which chips are later made, are analyzed to see if the intentional impurities do compensate for the other impurities.

Usually, five undergraduates work with Buschert on this project. In 1984-85 six assistants were 1985 graduates Monroe Weber, Fleetwood, Pa., and Brad Kliewer, Rochester, Minn.; current seniors Myron Lind, Eugene, Ore., Dale McMichael, Lancaster, Pa., and Tom Miller, Berlin, Ohio, and sophomore Randy Rheinheimer, Orrville, Ohio.



Professor of physics Robert Buschert talks with student Phil Smith, a senior physics major from Rosemont, Pa.

All the current students are still working with Buschert. They help prepare samples, machine parts for modifications and take data. They learn how to work with the IBM-PC computer, design experiments and reduce data. They are gaining experience usually open only to graduate students.

"These undergraduates are getting a rare opportunity to participate in highly specialized experimental work," Buschert said. "I think it has been an excellent experience for all of them." A few more students will join the team in January, he said.

In addition to gaining valuable research experience, the students encounter the Bell researchers in the classroom. "The company occasionally sends laboratory specialists to GC to speak at our science seminars," Buschert said. Bell has also donated some equipment to Turner Laboratory.

Buschert, who worked as a research scientist at Bell Telephone Laboratories in 1968-69, said the silicon testing project has resulted from his informal relationship with Bell researchers.

The Turner Laboratory will soon take on another project when it begins to analyze the structure of titanium nitride, a substance that holds promise as a substitute for gold in making electronic circuits. Buschert and his undergraduate assistants will be trying to find the exact proportions of titanium and nitrogen and the molecular structure that will make the substance the most like gold. Those experiments will be part of an effort coordinated among local scientists at the University of Notre Dame and at CTS Corp. in Elkhart where the samples are to be made.

Research leads to breakthrough

By Laurie Neumann Nafziger

Research scientist Roger Beachy '66 has recently engineered the kind of breakthrough scientists dream about.

Beachy heads a 16-person research team at Washington University in St. Louis, Mo. In December he and his colleagues made a discovery that they believe will lead to the first genetically engineered, virus-resistant agricultural crops.

"The results turned out better than I had hoped," Beachy said. "This is probably the most significant thing I'll do in my lifetime."

"We believe the breakthrough has been achieved," he continued. "Now it is a matter of understanding the mechanisms that cause the resistance and perfecting the techniques to produce plants that are field-resistant to virus infection."

For years, scientists have searched for a genetic engineering technique that would produce virus-resistant crops. Plant viruses are one of the main factors in reduced crop yields.

In addition to his achievements in research, Beachy recently became a full professor, an unusual achievement for his relatively short tenure at Washington University.

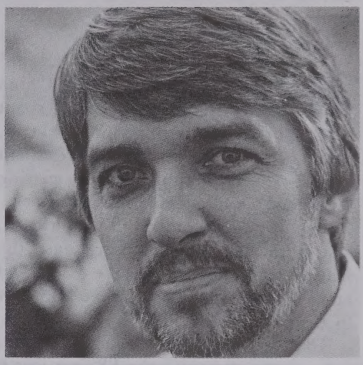
Besides research and teaching responsibilities, his days are filled with writing and speaking. He's authored 45 journal and review articles and presented more than 38 invited lectures. "It's a pretty fast-paced life," he admitted.

Beachy teaches several courses at the university, but research is his first love. "I'm a good teacher, but I'm not a Frank Bishop [GC professor of biology emeritus]," he said, laughing. "He's been an inspiration to me since my start in biology."

As a Goshen College student, Beachy wanted to be a high school biology teacher. He began to doubt his goal during his student teaching, and a 1-W experience in a hospital laboratory convinced him that he was most interested in research.

That discovery led to a Ph.D. in plant pathology from Michigan State University in 1973 and another five years of post-doctoral training.

After positions at Cornell University and at Brookhaven National Laboratories, both in New York, Beachy accepted a position at Washington University in 1978. "The university has an excellent reputation for research, and that's where I wanted to be," he said.



Beachy appreciates his undergraduate education at GC, which eventually led to his current position. "I received an education that provided the basis for future learning," he said. "I'm very happy now to be in a field that is providing a real service to the field of agriculture. It all fits with GC's motto of 'Culture for Service.' "

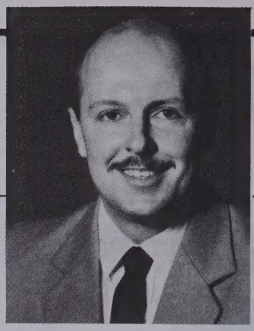
European concert tour planned

Goshen College-related singers have been invited to participate in an exciting European concert tour scheduled for July under the direction of Doyle Preheim, professor of music.

The director of the Choral Society of Southern California has asked GC's musicians to join members of the California group in performing two large works with major European orchestras.

The price of $2,366 includes round-trip travel from Chicago, etc. More information is available from the GC Music Department.



Around China: six cities in 17 days

By James E. Hochstetler '69

While the Goshen College China Tour organizers no doubt spent long months preparing for the trip, those of us who traveled there spent almost a year getting excited, getting ready and getting inoculated!

The group included 39 Americans, ages 35 to 82, from the East Coast, the Midwest and California. We assembled at an airport hotel near Tokyo and flew to Beijing on Oct. 11.

Then we went on to Xian, Chengdu (where our visit with the SSTers was a highlight), Chongqing, Wuhan and Shanghai. Our travels in China included a three-day riverboat trip down the Yangtze River. Our hosts and guides included alumni Zhang "John" Chongding and Liu Xiao-tong.

Our Chinese hosts worked very hard to ensure the best possible for us. In a developing nation with relatively scarce tourist facilities, this was often a difficult challenge. Our group learned to adapt to accommodations that do not meet North American standards. For example, we learned that in the absence of cold water, scalding hot water cools in the tub.

Our train trips across the country provided a relaxing view of everyday life in China. We saw people carrying heavy buckets of water and hoeing their vegetable patches.

I distinctly remember one such scene. From the train window, I saw a surrealistic view of a pole carrier hurrying with two waterbuckets, half-running near the train tracks, while nuclear cooling towers rose behind him shrouded in the grey mists of an overcast day.

Several of my journal entries follow:

After a day in the country: "We stopped the bus to photograph a water buffalo plowing. About eight of us rushed off the bus and right onto the field to get the shot with rather reckless disregard for the serenity of honest rural toil. The poor plowman tried to pretend we weren't there pointing expensive cameras at him; the buffalo, to his great credit, couldn't have cared less."

Scene from the bus window: "The school children were being let out for lunch as we left the silk factory, . . . many friendly faces and waving hands. . . . Mrs. Liu said a red sash is given out to them for good behavior. Bicycles all over; the bike path here is at least 30 feet wide.

What makes this kind of journey worthwhile?

We will hear and read news about China with a sense of immediacy and kinship, perhaps more depth and insight. China feeds itself without a large foreign debt and is looking to quickly advance technologically. The people are eager to extend their traditional hospitality and learn about Americans.

Accordingly, the world's most populous nation now is more than a foreign socialist regime, Mao jackets, junks sailing the Yangtze. Certainly, it is more than my Bible School portrayal of Little Wang Fu in his house of bamboo wood.

After a life full of professional accomplishments and honors, Clarence Fulmer '22, Wilmington, Del., declares himself "almost completely" retired.

After graduating from Goshen College, Clarence worked at Wilmington (Del.) High School for 41 years, the last 31 as principal.

Then Goldey Beacom College in Wilmington benefited from Clarence's talents. After teaching a number of years, he was named chairman of the board of trustees.

While he was in his 70s, the greatest challenge of his life still lay before him. Goldey Beacom's president resigned suddenly during the student unrest common on many American colleges in the '60s. So, Clarence stepped into the position of interim president for the next two turbulent years.

"It was very difficult until I was able to regain the confidence of the faculty and student leaders," Clarence remembers. "However, by the end of my second year, things were back on track. Some people say I saved the college." In honor of his work, the main building of the campus has been named for him.

Since his presidency, Clarence has continued to serve the Wilmington community. He's led many community and educational organizations, given hundreds of speeches and been honored with awards too numerous to mention. He's received two honorary doctorates, from Goldey Beacom College and the University of Delaware, as well as the university's highest non-academic award, the Medal of Distinction.

At 89, Clarence lives now in a retirement center in Wilmington. While he's reduced the number of public appearances and is enjoying a somewhat slower pace of life, he stays abreast of current events and maintains his many friendships.

Hodel studies in Russia — again

Ernie Hodel '66 was among 81 American Christians who visited the Soviet Union during August for a student seminar.

This was Hodel's second seminar in Russia, which was planned in conjunction with the National Council of Churches church relations program.

This year's group visited Moscow and Leningrad and then separated into four groups to visit other smaller cities. Two major Russian Orthodox observances were celebrated.

Human rights issues were discussed with government and church officials, and the group met with Christian and Jewish dissidents.

Hodel's strongest impression of Soviet church-goers was their fidelity in attending services and global awareness of Christianity. "We became aware they are under some constraint, but in spite of that, they practice their faith," he said. "An emphasis on peace was expressed in the church."

Washington, D.C., resident and writer Ivan J. Kauffman '64 was also a member of this group.

Board devises tuition discount plan

The Goshen College Board of Overseers gave an unexpected Christmas present to all current and prospective students at its meeting Dec. 16-17.

The present was in the form of an early deposit discount plan on 1986-87 tuition.

Although the board acted to increase tuition by 4.5 percent or $240, all students who make a $240 deposit by May 1, 1986 will freeze next year's tuition at this year's rate.

Juniors and seniors who agree to live in the dorm will receive an increased discount on room costs in addition to the tuition freeze and the discount they already receive for living on campus.

These actions reflect the board's desire to make a Goshen College education more affordable, said chairperson Arlene Mark. "We want students and the parents of students to know that we are concerned about holding down the cost of Mennonite higher education. A tuition freeze is one way to dramatize that commitment."

Other presents for students that came out of the meeting included the endorsement of a program to match student-aid funds from congregations and revised financial aid guidelines that would make more funds available for student grants and loans.

Under the matching-aid program students who receive grants from their local congregations will be assured matching aid from Goshen College funds up to $500. To be eligible congregations must notify the Office of Student Finance of the amount they intend to provide in aid by May 1, 1986.

Walter Schmucker, director of student finance, outlined a series of changes in scholarship guidelines that will greatly expand the number of students who will be eligibile for financial aid.

Burkholder National Merit Scholarships will no longer be limited to three students per year, and elibility for Menno Simons Scholarships will expand. The former Freshman Scholarship will become an Honors Scholarship and will be available to all students who rank in the top 15 percent of their graduating class, have a grade point average of 3.5 or an SAT score of 1000 or an ACT score or 23.

GC to match congregational aid

Congregations or conferences which provide direct financial support to their students at Goshen College have that aid matched dollar-for-dollar up to $500 with aid from Goshen College under a new plan devised in December.

The aid will come to students in the form of scholarships for which they qualify or from other Goshen College funds. In either case, the program doubles the first $500 of congregational financial aid per student.

Alice M. Roth, vice president for administration, said the matching grant approach should "encourage even more congregations to join the increasing number who support students at Mennonite colleges and seminaries."

Roth also announced that Goshen College has increased the minimum stipend for the Lawrence and Harriet Burkholder National Merit Scholarships to $1,500 from $1,000. Also, the limit on the number of recipients has been removed.

Further, amounts for the Menno Simons Scholarship and the Freshman Scholarship were also increased, Roth said. The Freshman Scholarship will become a four-year renewable award called the Honors Scholarship.

Music department has three openings

Goshen College has three teaching vacancies in the music department beginning in fall, 1986. The rank and salary will be determined by the candidates background and degree. Persons with a doctorate and college teaching experience are preferred. Applicants must be committed to Christian values, including peace in the Mennonite tradition. The three positions are:

1. A full-time, tenure-track position. Responsibilities include teaching traditional undergraduate theory, and they assume that the candidate has a working knowledge of 20th century musical styles, including the jazz idiom. Areas of private teaching may be woodwinds, brass, or organ. Experience in conducting and/or composition is desirable.

2. A one-year, full-time position. Responsibilities include the teaching of lower level music theory classes, an introductory course in conducting, the music portion of a general education course in music and art appreciation and directing the college orchestra. The preferred studio specialties are low stringed instruments or woodwinds and brass.

3. A long-term, two-thirds time position. Primary responsibility is to head the piano preparatory program. The candidate should have the ability to teach college piano students and courses in piano pedagogy.

Persons interested in any of these positions should send a letter of application, resume, transcripts and the names of three references to: Willard Martin, Dean, Goshen College, Goshen, IN 46526.

Basketball teams win in Menno classic

Thanksgiving festivities at Goshen College included the 18th Menno Basketball Classic Nov. 29-30, launching the season for both men and women. The women participated for the first time.

In the highest moment of the classic, Brenda Ervin banked a last-second shot from halfcourt into the basket to give the Maple Leafs a thrilling 66-64 win over Eastern Mennonite College. The day before, the women topped Bluffton College 69-50.

The men split their games, threshing Bethel College, North Newton, Kan., 77-71, and bowing to the EMC Royals, 75-71.

The Maple Leafs' performance in the classic foretold the season through December. The women carried an impressive 7-2 record into January, but the men mirrored that with a 2-7 mark.

The basketball season followed quickly on one of the most impressive fall seasons for varsity athletics in GC history. The Maple Leafs captured a state championship in field hockey and conference championships in four other sports — soccer, volleyball, cross country and women's tennis.

Further, junior cross country ace Fred Kem of Knox, Ind., represented Goshen College at the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics national cross country championships at Kenosha, Wis. Coached by John Ingold, he placed 91st in a field of 355 runners.

As for the team champions, the field hockey players had the most glorious finish of the fall. The Maple Leafs, with a final season record of 8-8-2, surprised top-ranked Depauw 1-0 and Earlham 1-0 to win the NAIA District 21 tournament.

Named to the all-district team were Pennsylvanians Chris Landis of Leola, Jane Grasse, Ephrata, and Elizabeth Weaver, Blue Ball. They and their teammates savored their first state title, knowing they had finished ahead of all other Indiana small colleges. "We played our hearts out," said Linda Shetler, their ecstatic coach, "and everything fell into place."

The men's soccer team and women's volleyball and tennis teams won their conference titles prior to having their seasons end at the district level.

The soccer team, with a 9-7 record overall, participated in its 16th consecutive NAIA District 21 playoffs after winning the Mid-Central Conference championship.

Dwain Hartzler, named Mid-Central Conference coach of the year, led the Maple Leafs to seven consecutive wins prior to the playoffs. Named to the NAIA academic all-American team were Mike Peachey, Akron, Pa., and Marc Zook, Goshen. The national soccer coaches also selected Tony Figueroa of San Pedro Sula, Honduras, to the NAIA all-American second team and Zook to the third team. Peachey, Figueroa and Zook were also all-district.

The women's volleyball team defeated Earlham and Anderson colleges to claim the title in the newly formed Hoosier Conference for Women. The spikers, coached by Sue Roth, ended their season with a 22-10 record, bowing to eventual champion IUPUI in the NAIA District 21 quarterfinals. Named all-district and all-conference were Jonell Kolb and Brenda Ervin.

Also winning a Hoosier Conference for Women title was the tennis team, led by Ruth Gunden, conference coach of the year. GC topped Hanover and Manchester to capture the title. Later, GC narrowly lost an opportunity to represent NAIA District 21 in the national tournament, bowing by a single point in a tie-breaker to St. Francis.

Even the men's tennis team, which didn't win any championships, came mighty close. Coached by Harold Yoder, the netters placed second in the Mid-Central Conference tournament, and the No. 1 singles player, sophomore Frank Hess of Goshen, placed second in the NAIA District 21 tournament to win all-district recognition.

These colleges get 'A's from presidents
Colleges which insist on broad education for students received the highest ratings in a survey of college presidents by U.S. News and World Report. 788 — nearly 60 percent — of the 1,318 presidents of the USA's four-year colleges and universities responded to the poll, published in the Nov. 25 USN&WR issue, which hits newsstands this morning.
Presidents were asked to pick the top five undergraduate schools from a list of those similar to their own college in

National media acclaim college

The national news media continue to commend Goshen College.

GC was included among "America's Best Colleges" in the U.S. News & World Report dated Nov. 25. In its Nov. 18 edition, USA Today repeated the good news in a story headlined "These colleges get A's from presidents."

U.S. News based its ranking on a survey of 788 college and university presidents. They found GC among the top 33 "smaller, comprehensive institutions" in the country.

The presidents were asked to consider such factors as strength of curriculum, quality of teaching, relationship between faculty and students and the atmosphere for learning. The magazine specifically pointed to GC's international education opportunities in which most "students go to a developing nation for one trimester to meet general education requirements."

Only two other Indiana colleges made the "best" list, although several other Indiana liberal arts colleges with national reputations for selectivity were listed in a separate category. GC was the only Mennonite college selected.

The ranking follows national recognition for Goshen College from other sources during the fall. New York Times education editor Edward B. Fiske called GC one of the 221 "best buys in college education" in an October book release by the same title. Later, the Great Lakes Colleges Association ranked GC 42nd nationally in percentage of graduates in the life sciences who eventually earn doctorates.

Surveys aid strategic planning process

A major marketing study funded by a grant from the Consortium for the Advancement of Private Higher Education and Lilly Endowment Inc. has reached the final stage of reporting, interpretation and implementation through the strategic planning process.

Five Goshen College audiences — faculty and administration, present students, Mennonite high school seniors, area high school seniors, and parents — responded to a mailed survey distributed in September. The National Institute for Organizational Research and Problem-Solving under the direction of consultant Walker Johanson designed the survey instrument, tabulated the results and reported findings in November.

Designed to help the college discover both strengths and weaknesses in its image among constituent groups, the survey has confirmed several classic Goshen distinctives: students report very high satisfaction with faculty and the quality of their educational experience, and most GC students have an alumni connection.

Consultant Johanson aid, "I have never seen a college with such a high 'legacy' connection. Most schools I have worked with consider 40 percent a high percentage of alumni-related students. Yours is 75 percent."

Johanson added, "You should feel very good about the faculty-student relationships on your campus. Much of our research uncovers tensions between these two groups. In your case, that did not happen."

President Victor Stoltzfus has included findings from the study in his first draft of a strategic plan, which has been distributed to members of the Strategic Planning Committee and the Board of Overseers. Areas designated for enhancement based on research are recreational and social facilities, and career services.

Sub-groups of the committee will discuss implications for the curriculum, religious life, financial aid policies and other variables. They will also make recommendations to the president for inclusion in his plan. The faculty will receive copies of the plan after the committee reviews it, and the president hopes to present a final draft to the overseers in March.

Charlotte Hurst dies in automobile accident

Admissions counselor Charlotte Weldy Hurst, 41, was killed Nov. 8 in a two-car collision. Seriously injured in the accident was her husband, Gerald R. "Tony" Hurst, 13199 Twin Oaks Drive, Middlebury, Ind. 46540, and the driver of the other car. She is also survived by two sons, Michael, 17, and Benjamin, 13.

Charlotte graduated from Goshen College in 1966 and had taught in Puerto Rico and at Heritage Middle School, Middlebury. She earned a master's degree from Indiana University at South Bend in 1984, the same year she joined the GC faculty. She was a member of the Pleasant Oaks Mennonite Church, Middlebury.

Rich Gerig, director of admissions, wrote the following tribute:

Charlotte Hurst was an admissions counselor at Goshen College for little more than a year. Her tragic death represents a major loss to the admissions office, both professionally and personally.

The many cards and calls received in the weeks since her death have added to the ample evidence we as her colleagues had already known: Charlotte made a lasting, positive impression on almost everyone she met.

Prospective students have said she made them feel welcome and comfortable when they visited campus. Parents have indicated they liked talking to someone who also had a college-bound senior at home. Admissions counselors from other Indiana colleges have written of her warmth and outgoing nature that made friendships easy to establish. Within our office, we remember her strong personal faith, love of family and penchant for fun.

Returning to the world of graduate study and work outside the home at age 40 had not been an easy step for Charlotte to take. Feelings of insecurity and the fumbling that goes with doing something new were obstacles she had to overcome. But this past fall had been a good one; her work had begun to fit her well.

Our admissions staff and student assistants have planted a beautiful red maple tree in memory of Charlotte just outside our office windows. Like her, it will become well-rooted in the first several months. In the spring new growth will be evident. And come fall, it will give off its beautiful color to all who happen by.

Apply! Student aid depends on it

Apply!

That's the advice of Walter Schmucker, director of student finance, for any families who hesitate to apply for state, federal or Goshen College financial aid funds. They might have heard rumors of federal student aid budget cuts or they might think family income disqualifies them, but a completed financial aid form allows an accurate assessment.

"The funds are available," Schmucker said, "but families must provide all the proper information to the right people before their students can receive aid."

The College Scholarship Service has begun receiving applications this month. Schmucker advises families to complete the Financial Aid Forms (FAFs) as early as possible and offered the assistance of GC student finance personnel.

Schmucker pointed out that although possible student aid cuts have been widely publicized, the U.S. Congress has not passed any major reductions. He predicted that federal aid will remain steady throughout 1986-87.

In Indiana, students who qualified for the state's Higher Education Grants or the Freedom of Choice Grants enjoyed 15 percent more funding this year than last. Funding for those grants is scheduled to increase the same amount next year as Indiana tries to catch up with its neighbors in providing aid to college students.

To receive consideration, Indiana students must file the Indiana Financial Aid Form by March 1. "Indiana residents must return FAFs on time," Smucker emphasized, "because a form received one day late will simply not be considered."

Schmucker advised parents to use estimated income and asset information if they do not yet have information from their tax returns.

Goshen College provides a booklet explaining the different forms of state, federal and Goshen College aid. Parents or prospective students may write to the Office of Student Finance for a copy of "Making Ends Meet" or phone (800) 348-7422 toll free or (219) 533-3161 collect.

Goshen College coordinated more than $1.9 millon in scholarships and grants from all sources in 1985-86. Loans and work programs add another $2 million to make a GC education affordable.

Stashed trash or shared ware?

By Berdine Mininger

A worn-out portfolio, overstuffed with watercolors and drawings, sits in my deserted room at home. Piles of prints lie in my drawer. Carefully stacked canvasses hide under my bed. Am I wasting what God has enabled me to learn?

I have always shied away from showing my art to anyone except my family — too much like a 6-year-old showing off new red sneakers. However, I am learning that sharing what I do is not asking for praise and attention. Sharing art opens the door to discussions with others about who we are, what we have learned and what we believe.

My overstuffed portfolio has potential for more than collecting dust. I exhibited last summer at a local nursing home and talked to the residents about how and why I made different pieces. They enjoyed learning how handmade paper is produced, and I enjoyed listening to them recall experiences my pieces reminded them of.

My piles of prints can do more than protect the bottom of a drawer. Professor Abner Hershberger convinced me to enter a piece in the student show at Notre Dame University. What the art critic from Chicago thought about my linocut of an infant's face and mother's profile was irrelevant; I felt good about being accepted and being able to share with a much broader audience the hope I have in children. Although I was not there to interact directly with anyone who saw my print, I believe it joined with the other works to reflect current students' values.

Not all of my paintings need to hide under a bed. A simple painting of Kenwood House near campus, where the Chinese professors live, is hanging somewhere in China. The subject matter of the painting may only communicate a common form of architecture in a Midwestern town, but the painting as a gift from Goshen College to the Chinese professors communicates hope for continued friendship.

I am learning the importance of sharing what God has enabled me to do. Although sharing begins with the family, it needs to expand eventually to people of varying backgrounds and beliefs. Everyone has a hidden portfolio to open and exhibit. The decision must be made to keep what we have learned under a bed or to use it to its fullest potential.

Historical research and creative teaching

By Sandra Unruh

When I first learned that my History Senior Seminar project was a major research paper, I balked. After all, I thought, how would such a project benefit me, a future teacher? I do not plan to write history; I plan to teach it.

However, after many hours of reading and synthesizing materials on the question, "What held the Equal Rights Amendment from ratification?," I am convinced that such a research project has opened my eyes to feminist ideas, has made me a more critical thinker and will help me become a more creative teacher.

Before coming to Goshen, I was not very informed about the feminist movement. Of course, I had heard of the ERA. It had been a heated topic in my junior high and early high school years. But I just didn't see the relevance it had for me; I didn't feel oppressed.

Although I am still not what I would term a "radical" feminist, I have become much more concerned with feminist issues. Many factors contributed to my choosing such a topic for my senior research project, including interacting with other students and listening to the views of my professors.

In particular, professor Shirley Showalter's Womanhood in America course challenged me to think about which women from history I admired most. Although I could think of many men, I couldn't believe how hard it was to come up with a woman's name. Then when James Hertzler suggested: "What caused the ERA to bog down?," I knew I had found my subject.

After reading many different interpretations of particular movements in history, especially related to the ERA, I began to realize that history is relative according to each author. Before, I was too eager to just absorb the material — the facts. But every historian interprets history through his/her own biases and perceptions. Becoming involved in the research has helped me to read and observe differently.

I try to be as objective as possible as I uncover what elements in the period 1972-75 stopped the Equal Rights Amendment from being ratified. Yet, I realize I will stress the causes that I think were the most important. Someone else with a different bias would most likely stress different causes.

As I synthesized my new ideas about feminism and history, I also gained practical skills for my future as a teacher. I now have research experience which will help me to become more creative in lesson planning. Classes are more interesting if the teacher brings in "extra" information not readily found in textbooks. If taught well, history has the potential to be a most exciting subject.

Though I would not have said so before my senior seminar project, it is not just the writers of history who must learn to research. It is also essential for those who will teach history to develop a more critical and creative perspective of those writings through research.

Sandra Unruh is a senior history major from Halstead, Kan.

The two hands of Marvin Blickenstaff

By Sanna Yoder

Performance and teaching are the right and left hands of Marvin Blickenstaff's musical self. As piano pedagogue, lecturer, accomplished recitalist, author and workshop leader, he cannot develop fresh ideas for one without learning from the other.

Blickenstaff finds balancing performance and teaching a delicate matter. As professor of music, he lectures in the piano pedagogy program and teaches piano. Meanwhile, he also lectures and performs throughout the United States.

"I have to teach," Blickenstaff said with an energetic emphasis that is his signature. "But when I'm not practicing or performing, I feel like the sponge which has been squeezed dry."

Blickenstaff's piano students — elementary school age through adults — begin their sessions with him at 9 a.m. and continue as scheduled until 8 p.m. He usually doesn't take a lunch break, although he does indulge one day a week during the Music Department meeting.

Blickenstaff tries to sneak in two hours of practice each morning before his students arrive. But he admitted that he should practice even more. "In order to play well," he said, "I have to practice. And in order to practice, time must be allotted." The time for practice should be daily, not crammed into two long weekend days, he said.

In the words of this consummate professional, practicing "replenishes" him. Discovery and refinement take place in the doing. After practicing, the teacher is free to release more to the student "about musical statements, the art, how you feel about certain composers and how you solve problems."

Blickenstaff's students learn from his learning. They deliver masterful senior recitals, start successful graduate programs, open home studios and enter teaching careers. They remain dedicated to his creative teaching relationships. They frequently call or visit when they're near and spend an occasional brunch with him and his wife, Sara Faye.

Blickenstaff clearly enjoys each student, young or old. He teaches a piano class of seven-year-olds. He also teaches senior college students. No matter what the age, he said "it's gratifying to be able to see a student's problem, solve it and change a performance."

Blickenstaff shares responsibility in the piano pedagogy program with associate professor Kathryn Sherer, who founded the program with former faculty member John O'Brien. Community children and youth participate in weekly classes taught by the piano faculty. They also receive a private, half-hour lesson each week from GC students studying in the various levels of the piano pedagogy curriculum.

Staying involved in the living world of musical practice, performance and pedagogy is the key to effective teaching, Blickenstaff believes. "You do not teach well because you read a good book about teaching," he said. "Effective teaching is based on one's own practical experience."

Blickenstaff stays connected with the musical world during trips across the country as a resource person and recitalist for piano pedagogy workshops and music teacher conventions. In November he made a return appearance at a piano workshop at Elizabethtown (Pa.) College to talk about teaching intermediate students. A few weeks earlier, he had been the featured artist and lecturer at the state convention of the Louisiana Music Teachers Association. This winter Blickenstaff will fly weekly to Madison, Wis., to teach a piano pedagogy course at the university.

Blickenstaff maintains that his credibility with other music teachers is secondary to the same teaching/performing balance that makes him so effective with piano students.

"I can talk about what happened yesterday with my class of seven-year-olds," Blickenstaff explained. "Many college teachers can lecture on the fine points of Bach interpretation or Beethoven sonata literature. But there aren't an awful lot of people in the country who Monday through Friday teach all levels of students — beginners, junior high, high school and college."

Neither have many musicians who are experts with seven-year-olds also played an auspicious debut in New York City. Blickenstaff's 1969 recital there won an enviable New York Times review: "Last night at Town Hall, Marvin Blickenstaff announced himself an expert with his very first note. . . ."

Performance and teaching — audiences who hear Blickenstaff play and students who learn from his discoveries understand most how they both interact in this gifted and effective musician.

Research renews our vision

By Victor Stoltzfus

Vital colleges engage in research as well as teaching. scholars discover dignity in contributing to knowledge as well as in selecting and teaching the research findings of others. Professors who perform or publish important discoveries beyond the campus gain respect from their colleagues and students.

Campus culture has traditionally been comfortable with the use of research tools to learn about the worlds of nature and human nature. However, colleges have had less curiosity about their own institutional life. The current competitive era in higher education has moved American colleges and universities to a greater use of institutional research to supplement the informal and intuitive ways of maintaining high quality at modest cost.

Institutional research was historically associated with formal accreditation, which Goshen College first received from the North Central Association in 1941. Since then, GC has undergone follow-up evaluations every 10 years. The self-study and lengthy report of visiting administrators and professors are a valuable means of college-wide assessment.

In addition, professional departments such as social work, nursing and teacher education have also been accredited by outside agencies. These departments regularly respond to requests for data used in evaluation. Our international education program has had several outside evaluations as well.

Other insights come to the college through its officers' affiliations with several professional associations which exchange research ideas among the nation's colleges. The American Association of Higher Education includes both public and private education. The Council of Independent Colleges is composed of about 300 colleges similar to Goshen. The Christian College Coalition has 72 members. All of these provide seminars and literature which keep us in contact with the creative leaders and the best ideas about education.

The Mennonite Board of Education also plays an important role in gathering and providing data. MBE determines how many young people are approaching college age, their location and trends in college choice. MBE monitors college budgets and endowment investments and requires a report on the college's internal projections and future plans.

For the past year, Albert Meyer, MBE executive secretary, has been gathering research on the substantive issues which church agency and congregational leaders believe are important for the future of the Mennonite Church. His findings indicate that leadership, clearer denominational identity and stronger marriage and family life are priority areas which college programs should address.

The Board of Overseers has the ultimate responsibility for governance. In carrying out this task, members originate many ideas for college improvement. Numerous ideas have come from the President's Advisory Board, composed of leaders in the business and professional community of Elkhart County. The Alumni Board and Parents Council each spend an intensive day on campus and always provide new insights and suggestions.

We are using research in a vital way at Goshen College. Students who stop-out have an exit interview. Nearly 200 parents of new students were phoned by a faculty member or administrator earlier this year to ask how things were going with their student. Numerous compliments and 45 suggestions were passed along to the deans.

Every week brings letters or phone calls from donors, parents, college friends or critics. Today I opened a letter with the following words from a parent: "My wife and I see Goshen College retaining its identity, set apart from, yet concerned with, secular society. We see the salt of the earth in faculty, administration and students — not having lost its savor. We see bright and friendly faces optimistic about the future. We see the spiritual roots nourishing the tree of life in students and community. . . . Goshen College has done much to nourish (our daughter's) faith, and for this we are grateful."

Both compliments and constructive criticism help us. As the human eyes age, they lose a youthful capacity to adjust. Eyeglasses correct for distance and allow us to continue to enjoy reading in the middle years. Formal and informal research are also corrective lenses that focus outside information for a college that is dedicated to renewing its vision even as it anticipates its 100th birthday in 1994.

A tap on the shoulder

What is the best way for one person to help another think about possible careers?

In an earlier era Harold Bender, the former dean of Goshen Biblical Seminary, would tell college students what field they should go into. Many that he tapped on the shoulder successfully followed his advice.

Today the idea of adults telling young people what they should do with their lives would probably be as successful as telling them who they should marry.

But we can make others — young and old — aware of gifts we see in them that they may to be overlooking. Often we take the things we do well for granted because they are so automatic. Recognition, even praise of another's ability to organize, build or draw is a simple task that could open up career possibilities they had never considered. We aren't telling them what to do; rather we're helping them get a truer measure of who they are. —JDY

SST to Jamaica

For only the second time in its 18-year history, the Study-Service Trimester program has moved a unit due to political unrest in the host country. The 23 students and two faculty advisers of the Haiti SST unit left Port-au-Prince safely Feb. 4, three days before former President Jean-Claude Duvalier left Haiti.

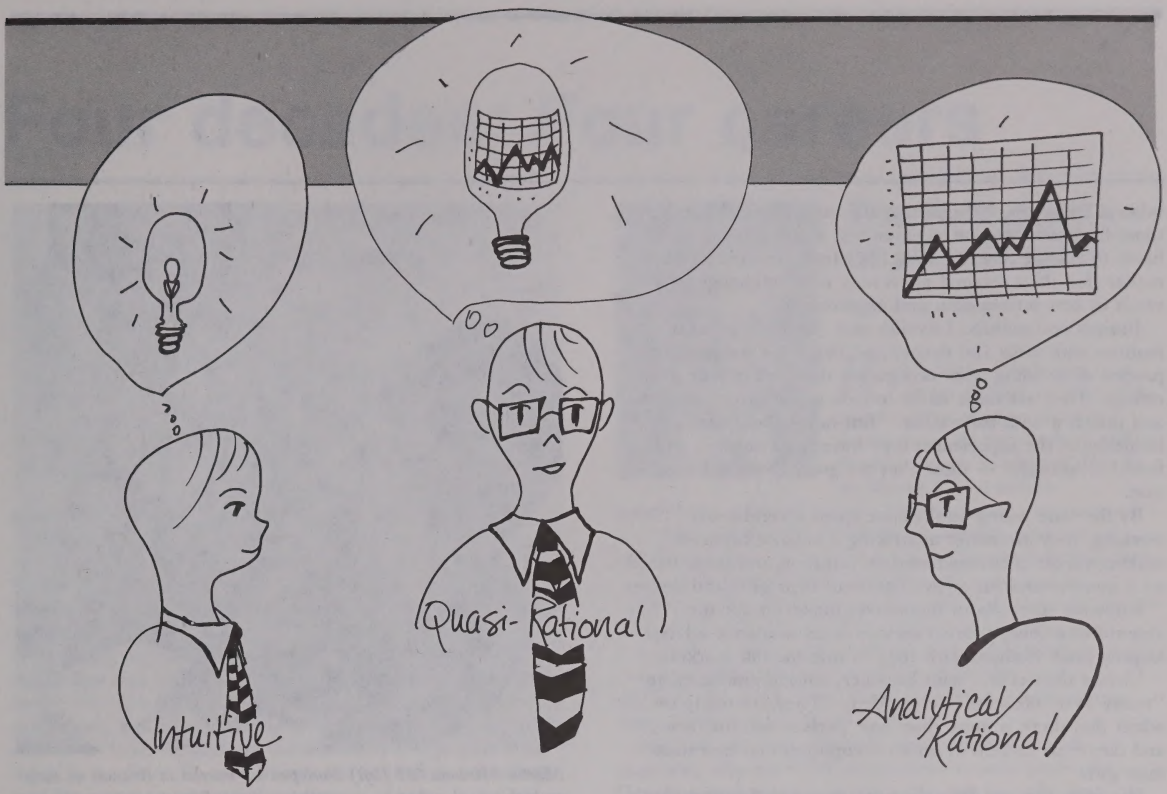
The SST unit is now in Kingston, Jamaica, where the students were initially housed in the headquarters of Mennonite Central Committee and a private home. GC professor of home economics Catherine Mumaw met the group in Jamaica and spent nine days helping them make arrangements. The students are staying in a hostel run by Mico College, a college Mumaw has worked with before.

Mumaw and the faculty leaders, Kathy Bartel and Russ Binkley, Hesston, Kan., planned a three-week schedule of classes and field trips for the students, to be followed by stays in Jamaican homes.

The decision to move the unit was made after Arlin Hunsberger, GC director of international education, flew to Haiti Feb. 1 to assess the situation there. GC officials also decided not to send the spring trimester Haiti SST unit to Haiti. Instead the group will go to another Caribbean site, either Jamaica, Guadeloupe or Puerto Rico. The decision on the spring site was to be announced in early March.

Although the students in Haiti were not in danger when Hunsberger arrived Feb. 1, he decided to move the unit because students could not travel outside Port-au-Prince and would not be able to fulfill their service assignments.

"Our number-one priority is the safety of the students — not just the physical safety, but also their emotional well-being," Hunsberger said after returning from Haiti. "We also are concerned with the ability of our faculty directors to run the kind of program we want."



Intuition guides career planning

By Sanna Yoder

The career path is frequently forked and winding. Even when our eventual occupations are satisfying and enjoyable, the methods we use to arrive at them may appear to be based on a haphazard collision of circumstance, skill and intuition — and, yes, logical planning.

But the interplay of these career forces is not nearly as haphazard as it might appear, says director of career services Fred Litwiller. In fact, our eventual occupations, whether planned or a pleasant surprise, often grow out of "themes" that have been with us since we were young.

"When asked, 'How did you make that career decision?' people will respond: 'Oh, I don't know, it just happened — it was kind of an intuitive decision.' We many times look at our intuition as kind of a sixth sense while in reality it comes from our past experience," Litwiller said.

It's not that we're pre-destined. It's just that what we know about ourselves intuitively plays an important role in any systematic planning in regard to careers.

Intuition and logical planning are both vital parts of life planning. Logical planning contributes to the self-understanding we arrive at through intuition, Litwiller believes. Both interact with circumstance and skill to guide students and young adults into solid career decisions.

Quasi-rational is the term Litwiller uses for decision-making when intuition and logic work together.

He first encountered the term in a study by Steve Baumgardner, "Vocational Planning: The Great Swindle," written when Baumgardner was an assistant professor of psychology at the University of Wisconsin, Eau Claire. In the study 72 percent of the college alumni questioned said that they had entered their occupations on the basis of some combination of circumstantial factors and planning. Only 28 percent said that systematic career planning had led to their current job.

Baumgardner went so far as to say that "we should give up systematic career planning, both as a description of how careers are chosen and as a prescriptive ideal of how careers ought to be chosen." He continued, "We need a good theory of non-rationality."

Despite the value of intuition in making career decisions, most students begin college believing they should make their career choices rationally.

Freshmen, who feel pressure to answer the questions such as "What's your major?" or "What are your plans," are more likely to think systematically about how certain courses and majors lead to specific occupations.

After more than a year of general studies as various as biblical literature, American studies and physical fitness, those freshmen become sophomores, a group much more likely to change their majors. They have new ideas. They realize that their original plans may need to change as a result of new information and experience.

Juniors and seniors, Litwiller said, integrate present realities with skills and desires and begin the quasi-rational process of deciding what occupation they will pursue after college. They are more likely to look at the career market and match it with their skills. "But not without the influence of the experiences they have most enjoyed and found meaningful — those they feel good about," Litwiller said.

By the time young adults have spent several years working, they are better at striking a balance between making career decisions based on intuition and those based on a more systematic re-evaluation of their gifts and desires.

Knowing more about themselves makes up for the absence of a college career service or an academic adviser helping them evaluate how they fit into the job market.

"More than ever," said Litwiller, college graduates are "ready to do business." He added, "They are ready to admit that there is more than one 'perfect' job for them, and they start to zero in on an occupation that best uses their gifts."

His main concern for college graduates is that they don't take the time to systematically re-evaluate their gifts, desires and abilities. "Part of the problem is that we're so busy and involved in our current jobs that we don't set up an appointment with career services or a trusted friend to talk about the possibilities," he said.

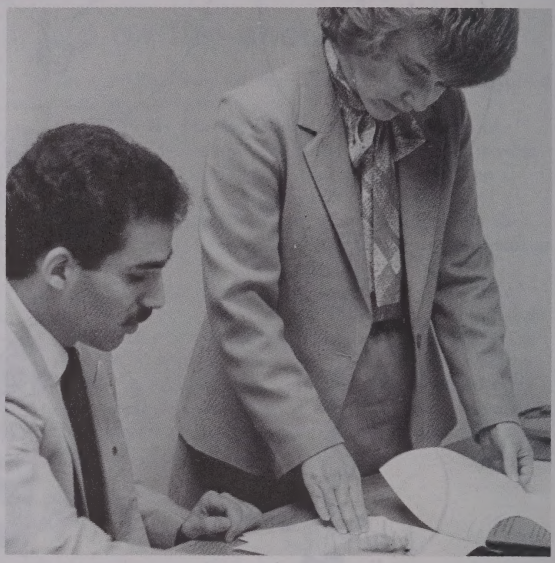
"We've got to keep looking at our work and life values," Litwiller said. That process might include questions like, "Do I like to be around people?," "Is working with faith issues every day important to me?" or "To what degree do I enjoy paperwork and other details?"

"If we don't ask these questions from time to time," he added, "there is a greater possibility we won't be using our full potential."

Ironically, many of the post-graduates that Litwiller counsels discover that their current occupations offer more outlet for their gifts than they might have thought. "As they participate in interviews and tests," Litwiller said, "they confirm some of what they already know. Then they go on to talk about whether a change is in order, within their existing occupation or perhaps later in a completely different area."

The interplay of intuition and logic at all career stages is not just important: Litwiller believes they may actually be dependent on each other in many cases.

For example, the self-discovery "instruments" that Litwiller uses in career counseling call on decision-makers to set aside time to look systematically at what they know about themselves. The tests ask questions that encourage students to think rationally about issues they have only known intuitively.



Martin Miranda '85 (left) developed his interest in finances as early as high school, when he was treasurer for a Junior Achievement mini-company. A practicum at Midwest Commerce Banking Company, Elkhart, landed him the job of floating branch manager under vice president/regional manager Judith Kirchner (right).

In turn, "the discoveries students make in an analytical career study become a part of the pool of knowledge they draw on in their future, intuitive decision-making process," Litwiller said.

Analysis and intuition can be important checks for each other, Litwiller believes.

"I especially remember the student who really got along well with a certain professor," he related. "The professor's style and charisma were so attractive that the student decided on a corresponding major." In reality, Litwiller said, "the student's goals and skills were not suited for that field." A series of tests and career counseling sessions helped the student discover his real motivations.

On the other hand, systematic planning to the exclusion of all other motivations can eliminate exciting career possibilities. "It is unfortunate when people can't change careers until they have some kind of final plan," Litwiller said. Trusting our ability to cope and make proper choices as options appear allows for risk-taking, as in the case of an adult who wants to make a career change.

When intuitive and logical planning come together, the result is more than finding the ideal occupation, Litwiller believes.

"It means we can come closer to an occupation in which we can use our gifts in meeting the needs of te world while being true to our own values," he said.

Four decades: Four careers

From Record to Newsweek

By John D. Yoder

When Lucille Beachy graduated from Goshen in 1957, she had no clear sense of direction, much less career goals. "I took a teaching job in Michigan simply to support myself," she said.

Perhaps it was the times. "Women didn't think in terms of career goals then as they do now," she continued.

Lack of direction didn't stop her from testing new job possibilities. In 1958 she moved to New York, eager to try something different.

Since she enjoyed journalism and had worked on the Maple Leaf and Record at Goshen, she searched the want ads in the New York Times for openings with magazines and publishers. But those were the days before journalism courses at Goshen, and she did not really feel prepared for a job in the field. To earn money she worked as a secretary and for a time taught speed reading.

Searching the want ads finally paid off with a job as a "mailgirl" at Newsweek. "I delivered internal mail, clipped the wire service copy and took it to the appropriate department and ran errands around town, like picking up photographs from picture agencies."

After several months in the mail room, she moved to the research department. "Moving from the mail room into research was the 'career path' for women then," she said. "Men had an entirely different route. All the writers and editors were men and all the women were in research. If a woman wanted to report or write, she had to go elsewhere."

Beachy stayed in research through the '60s and '70s, eventually becoming chief of the department. In that position she helped change the rules about where men and women started in the organization and how they were promoted. "We made it a point to train both women and men to go on to be writers," she said.

Since 1984 she has been correspondent in special projects, working on special Newsweek issues like those about the 40th anniversary of Hiroshima and the 1984 election.

What does Beachy's path from mailgirl to correspondent tell us about careers? The unifying thread in her career has been a determination not to allow the job of the moment to limit her. Instead, "I took the job I found and turned it into what I wanted to do," she said.

The evolution of an educator

By John D. Yoder

Kirk Alliman graduated from Goshen College in 1965 with plans to be a teacher. First he would go to graduate school and finish a degree in history; then he would teach in a college somewhere. Instead he spent 12 years as an administrator for Church World Service before becoming president of Hesston College, without ever having taught a college class.

The first part of his master plan did work out: he received his Ph.D. in history from the University of Iowa in 1970. Then other factors he could not control began to change his occupational direction. He was drafted as soon as he completed graduate school and decided to do alternative service with Church World Service because a friend of his was also with CWS.

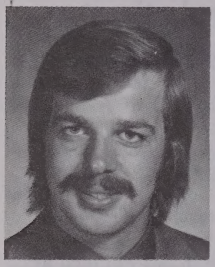
His first job was a one-year assignment to Korea, analyzing why the CWS tuberculosis control projects on Cejudo island weren't working. He met his wife, Jean Ophart, in Korea. CWS then assigned him to the Philippines, to work as country representative, a largely administrative position. In 1974 the Allimans were reassigned to a World Council of Churches refugee-resettlement project in Pakistan; from there they went to Central America, where Kirk was regional representative from 1975 to 1977.

He became CWS disaster relief coordinator, working from CWS headquarters in New York in 1977, and moved to CWS Asia program director in 1978.

In retrospect, many of his CWS experiences were excellent preparation for a college presidency, he believes. Much of his CWS work "involved bringing a variety of people together, people very different from myself, to work on a common goal," he said. "I learned how people in an organization can enhance each other. College presidents try to do the same thing."

At a deeper level, he sees his jobs with CWS as a kind of teaching. "In all my positions, it was my job to empower and provide resources for nationals, particularly youth, so that when we left, they could carry on the task of responding to human need. That is basically a form of education."

Kirk Alliman '65 is president of Hesston (Kan.) College.



Taking risks

By Laurie Nafziger

A willingness to take risks summarizes Verlin Nafziger's career story.

After graduating from Goshen College in 1974, Nafziger worked for Zehr Construction as a carpenter. "I guess I did that because I knew some people working there," he explained. "I didn't have much experience, but I must have had some natural talent." He started as a ditchdigger and advanced to a trim carpenter.

In 1977, he decided he was good enough to make it on his own. He formed Nafziger Construction, followed soon by Classic Construction when he joined forces with a local businessman. That business lasted a year, "until I had lost so much money that I couldn't do it anymore."

Needing to make payments on a large debt, Nafziger returned to carpentering for another Goshen construction firm, D-J Construction. Gradually he was able to whittle his debt down to zero.

During this time he began to dream of a major career change. Leaman Sowell '77, then a first year law student, encouraged Verlin to consider law. "He's responsible for the entire debacle," Nafziger laughed. "He told me he thought I'd be good at it."

The seed planted, Nafziger pursued the idea. With a respectable score on the Law School Admission Test, he applied to several law schools in 1981 but wasn't accepted.

After that setback, Nafziger continued to hammer nails and re-evaluate his goals. With encouragement from friends, he applied to law school again the next year and was accepted at two universities. He chose Indiana University because "it was cheaper."

After completing law school, Nafziger is a first year associate for the Detroit firm of Kitch, Saurbier, Drutchas, Wagner and Kenney.

He is quick to point out that this job isn't necessarily the end of his story. "I'll make another career change if my interest wanes or talents lead elsewhere. Who knows? Interstate trucking might be fun too."

Persistence pays off

By Janet Kraybill

I would not win any prizes for creative job-hunting. Although I am very happy with the job I now have, I came upon it more through dogged persistence than by strategic career planning.

My biggest problem when I started job hunting was not knowing what I was hunting for. I thought "Publishing" sounded interesting, but I didn't really know what people in publishing did. The idea of getting paid to read books was certainly appealing, however.

So I went off in search of a publishing job. The want ads weren't much help because I had to rule out the ones that required experience (which I didn't have) or "gd typg" (which mine wasn't). This left me with rather limited options.

The next step in my job search was to try the employment agency circuit. One has to be careful with these agencies because they're always trying to turn people into secretaries. After almost giving up on employment agencies, I found one where they actually talked to me before they gave me a typing test. They arranged an interview at a publishing company with two very nice women who were more concerned with my personality than my words-per-minute. To my happy surprise, they hired me!

Later when I discovered that they had hired me, a "humble Goshen graduate," over candidates from Harvard and Princeton, I asked them why. Their response was that they sensed in the interview that I really wanted the job and that I would work hard. Entry-level publishing is not glamorous and is not well-suited to people who a) expect to meet bestselling authors the first week, b) refuse to use a Xerox machine or c) demand a large salary.

Meanwhile, I have graduated from the Xerox machine and now have my own books to work on. As a publicist, I write press releases about books and set up radio and TV interviews for authors. And, yes, I even get paid to read books.

Janet Kraybill '82 is a publicist for E. P. Dutton in New York City.

Children also have careers

By Jim Rhodes

"What do you want to do when you grow up?" "Why don't you get a good job?" "What are you going to college for?"

Do these questions sound familiar? Of course they do. They come from well-meaning, upwardly-mobile, middle-class adults and parents who, out of Christian concern, parental duty or pure frustration, hope to see their progeny move smoothly into adulthood with a career that will support them comfortably.

Unfortunately, these adults are asking young people the wrong question, in the wrong way, at the wrong time. I prefer to look at a career not as a single entree but rather as the whole meal, the gestalt of life, "everything which one does." This broad view of what a career is includes the things that individuals of any age need to do as they develop. It is on-going, vibrant, flexible, dynamic, resilient and changing.

While we adults worry about how we can afford to send our children to the "best" college so they will have a good career, their careers are being formed under our noses. Activities our children are involved in now will likely have longer-lasting career implications.

Take a look. What are your children doing? What books do they read? What toys are they playing with? What are their hobbies? Who are their role models? What academic skills are they developing? The most important question for parents to ask is: "What am I doing right now to give positive direction to the career of my child?"

Many parents are not aware of the connection between extracurricular activities and a young person's career development. Research indicates that a student's vocational success is positively related to his or her involvement in extracurricular pursuits while in school.

Parents should encourage their children to join interest clubs, try out for special groups and develop hobbies. Ideally parents can work with and enjoy many activities with their children.

In addition to extracurricular activities, children should also become familiar with different types of work. What jobs do people do? What does cousin Mark or aunt Sue do? Why do they do it? We should talk with our children about various occupations with as few biases and prejudices as possible. They need to know that almost any job that is useful to society is worth doing.

In emphasizing the importance of extracurricular activities, I do not want to diminish the value of part-time jobs for high school students. Much learning about careers does take place in job situations. However, I believe that high school is too early to sacrifice the valuable exploring that takes place through extracurriculars in order to have more hours on a job.

When discussing careers with their children, parents must realize that society needs only a certain number of people in the "prestigious professions." A desire for glamour, honor and financial rewards should not be the prime factors in vocational choice, especially if they are in conflict with the child's interest, aptitude and ability.

Another way parents can help their children is to become familiar with the testing and guidance resources of the schools. Although tests are by no means absolute, they are excellent indicators of a student's strengths and weaknesses, along with grades and teacher's observations. Many high schools now offer interest inventory and aptitude tests that lead into career planning programs.

When good communication between parents and teens is present, family activities related to careers can be very helpful. Family visits to several colleges may suggest a direction for career decisions, or a family might read Working, by Studs Terkel, a book in which people talk about what they do and how they feel about what they do. Another resource to explore together is a U.S. Department of Labor publication, Occupational Outlook Handbook, which has specific information about the training required, employment outlook and earnings for various jobs.

And now, a word about college. College may not be for everyone, but I believe more people could profit from it than do.

People often assume that college is where one goes to get "career training." As a result they will say, "Since I don't know what I want to do, why should I waste time and money on college?" However, uncertainty about one's career may be the best reason for going to college. College may be just the catalyst that brings the pieces together.

Research has shown that college graduates are usually more satisfied with their employment, are more active in their church and community and experience a high degree of family satisfaction. College is worth it for these reasons alone!

A career involves much more than vocational choice. It is the total sum of one's productive work or activity. How, then, can parents aid their children in career development? "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it" (Prov. 22:6).

Ultimately it makes little difference whether our children become construction workers, teachers, engineers or truck drivers. What really matters is that they make a positive contribution to society and are happy in doing it.

How churches can support people in career crisis

By John D. Yoder

Despite the best career preparation, education and planning, the right job is sometimes elusive. The job that seemed so promising turns out to be a prison of frustration; a small business or farm fails due to a shift in the economy; or a plant closes and suddenly throws employees out of work.

In these circumstances a large portion of the people affected will not seek help from government sponsored or private programs, according to Mike Kenney, a career consultant in Indianapolis. "But they will turn to the church," Kenney said, "if the church proclaims its willingness to assist."

A former Jesuit priest, Kenney knows the feeling of being in a career that no longer fit his interests. After a time of searching for answers to his own career direction and counseling other job seekers informally in his home, he left the priesthood and turned his self-acquired expertise in career counseling into a business called Career Consultants.

Now, although he counsels many people as part of his business, he is convinced that the church could be a significant resource for individuals who are unhappily employed or unemployed.

"Unfortunately most churches are not prepared to help people with a job search," Kenney said. "My suspicion is that churches and church leadership do not take the first step to help because they are not sure what they can do with the problem."

How can churches help? A basic need of people looking for work is someone to talk to. "The worst thing about unemployment is loneliness," he said. "Churches can form support groups for people seeking employment." In a support group people have an opportunity to talk about what they would like to do and express their feelings. "It can give people permission in a supportive atmosphere to dream dreams."

Churches are also a natural place for "networking," the process of making informal contacts with people that accounts for 60 percent of all hirings. "Church bases are eminently secure places to make such contacts," Kenney said. "You perceive a person not as a hard-nosed, aloof executive but as a pewmate — someone who's helpful, uncritical, with similar values. That reduces one's insecurity."

Based on his work with churches who want to be involved in helping people with career issues, Kenney has developed a list of congregational responses to the issue of unemployment and unhappy employment.

1. Be aware of the issue. "Most churches do not legitimize the pain of unemployment because they aren't aware that there is a problem," Kenney said. Once they are aware, people must be willing to minister to the issue and communicate that willingness to the congregation. "Don't assume people know you are concerned," he said.

2. Provide resources such as typing, photocopying, answering services, printing, access to literature, day care and part-time "survival" jobs. "The job seeker confronts a whole series of seemingly minor frustrations," he said. "Volunteers can assist with those frustrations. Each point of assistance gives people a sense of support. The volunteers need little or no training."

3. Train people to talk to job seekers. "Most people are reluctant to talk to the unemployed because, they a) are not personally doing any hiring, and b) don't know any job openings," Kenney said. "As a result they think they would simply be 'wasting' the time of the job seeker. That simply is not true. If nothing else, they're making the job seeker's experience less lonely. A one-night training program would accomplish a lot."

4. Train job seekers in job-search skills. "Most people simply do not know how to look for employment. They don't know, for example, that the majority of people currently employed in the United States never filled out an application form before they got hired. Congregations can provide training, pay for training, share training, or at least find places that do this."

5. Provide financial assistance directly tied to the job search. "Recently unemployed people are reluctant to spend any money on themselves or their job search. That slows down their search and makes their efforts ineffective," Kenney said.

6. Have regularly scheduled group activities for those who are unemployed. "Any sort of activity (even volunteer projects that are not directly job related) serves to counteract the effects of depression. People who are not working quickly lose a sense of self worth, since work and worth are so tied together in our culture. They need a constant sense of being 'valuable' at something, or they will not appear 'valuable' to a prospective employer. A church base that provides structure, things to do and places to arrive can be extremely helpful."

Kenney cautioned that congregations should not approach job seekers as if they have a problem. "The job seeker is not the problem; you should not follow a therapeutic model," he said. "What churches can do is talk to people about their giftedness. You must begin with the assumption that people have skills. I've never met an unskilled person."

Job in government challenges journalist

By Laurie Newmann Nafziger

It does, and it doesn't, surprise Sarah Eby-Ebersole '71 that she's working as press secretary for the lieutenant governor of Georgia.

An English degree from Goshen College certainly helped prepare her for the job. So did her first jobs after graduation. However, she wasn't working toward the position of press secretary for anyone: she stumbled into it.

After graduating from GC in 1971, Sarah taught for two years at Christopher Dock Mennonite High School. When she didn't enjoy teaching as much as she had hoped, she decided to earn a graduate degree in journalism, graduating from Penn State University in 1974.

From there she worked for four years with Mennonite Central Committee (MCC). The first two years she served in a voluntary capacity, and the next two as director of information services.

Her MCC experiences were invaluable. In addition to tremendous work experience, she met MCCer Dan Ebersole. They were married in 1978, and spent the first summer of their married life working on the re-election campaign of Lt. Gov. Zell Miller.

With Sarah's educational background and work experience, it followed that she would help Miller with his campaign advertising. Recognizing her skill in communication, Miller offered her a position on his office staff.

When Miller's press secretary left in 1979, Sarah moved into that position. For the past five years she's enjoyed the varied responsibilities of a press secretary: legislative research, tracking bills, meeting with special interest groups, writing speeches and facilitating press contacts with the lieutenant governor.

But there's more to Sarah than politics and work. Two children round out Sarah's life, leaving little free time. "I don't have much time for hobbies," she laughed.

The decision to continue working outside the home has not been an easy one for Sarah. However, there are some things working in her favor: an excellent child care center located across the street from her and Dan's office, and flexible work hours that allow her extra time with her children.

In addition to a flexible and exciting work environment, loyalty to the lieutenant governor makes Sarah's work satisfying. She believes him to be on the cutting edge of many issues and has enjoyed some of the legislative battles.

Sarah recognizes that Miller won't always be in office and it's impossible to predict what will happen with her position. She realizes that some day she will move into the private sector.

However, not just now.

Miller is up for re-election this fall and is a very strong candidate. So for the next four years . . . .

New Role For Eby

By Laurie Neumann Nafziger

When Mary Jane Breneman Eby '57 tells her career story, allow yourself plenty of time to listen — and bring an atlas too.

Since graduating from Goshen College and marrying her college sweetheart Lawrence Eby '57, Mary Jane has filled the roles of wife, mother, nurse, volunteer, "farmer's" wife and youth minister.

Professionally, Mary Jane has worked most of her life as a nurse in both hospitals and office settings with her physician husband. The settings have varied from Ann Arbor, Mich., to Portland, Ore., to Nigeria, back to Portland, to Puerto Rico, and now in Millersburg, Ohio.

During these years many of her hours were also spent parenting their six children — Doug '81, Don '86, Tom '86, Janette '87, Karl and Jill. (Yes, you read that right. The Ebys' have two seniors and one junior at GC this year).

Mary Jane's interests extend beyond medicine and family. She also assumed a major responsibility with the Ohio Conference by serving as the first female chairperson on conference commission, specifically the Nurture Commission.

Then she was offered a job that took her out of the nursing field — at least for awhile. For the past nine months, she has worked as the youth minister for the Ohio Conference. The job involves traveling around the conference, meeting with pastors, recruiting area youth coordinators, coordinating activities and serving as a resource for area coordinators.

So, 29 years after earning a diploma in nursing, Mary Jane finds herself in an important church leadership position.

That isn't to suggest that she won't make more career changes. It only means that she's happy working where she is now.

"China Update" Conference

The Indiana Consortium for International Programs will sponsor a conference, "China Update: U.S. Ambassadors in China's Classrooms," April 4 at Goshen College. Arlin Hunsberger, GC international education director, and Roy Umble, professor emeritus of communication, are coordinating the conference.

J. Lawrence Burkholder, president emeritus, will present the keynote address, "Implications of the Open Door." Alumna Ruth Yu Hsiao '61 will speak on teaching literature in China, and Atlee Beechy, emeritus professor of psychology and peace studies, will speak on the China Educational Exchange program.

Ethel Umble and alumna Laura Funk '66, who participated in the China Educational Exchange program, and senior Ann Minter, a member of the fall, 1985, China SST group, will speak on teaching English in China.

Other speakers will be William Liu, University of Illinois at Chicago, on interpersonal relations in China; Phillip West, Indiana University East Asian Studies Center, on Indiana in China, and David Waas, Manchester College, who will summarize the day's presentations.

All interested persons are welcome to attend; there is no registration fee. Those wishing to attend should contact Hunsberger or Roy Umble.

Hartley workshop set

"Enriching Musical Activities" will be the theme of the eighth annual Mary K. Hartley Memorial Workshop March 21-22 at Goshen College.

Educators in music or those who work in nursery schools, kindergartens and elementary schools are invited.

The registration fee of $6.50 covers all sessions. Interested persons should contact Theresa Gunden, Goshen College Music Department, 533-3161. Registration deadline is March 19.

'60 gift puts scholarship fund over the top

The financial load of a deserving student will be lighter this fall, thanks in part to the Class of '60.

Members of the Class of '60 gave a 25th anniversary gift to the college — a gift that put the Alumni Scholarship Fund over the $10,000 level needed to make the endowed scholarship operational.

While the Class of '60 gift "topped off" the fund, recognition must also be given to the class members with reunion years ending in 3, 4, 8 and 9 who also contributed to the scholarship.

The idea originated with the Alumni Executive Board in 1983. At the board's meeting in April, they will develop guidelines for awarding the scholarship.

White wins award for story

Neva White '44, library professor emerita at Kansas State University, recently won second place in the annual Olive Ann Beech Award contest for factual Kansas stories. The purpose of the contest is to encourage preservation of pioneer events in narrative form. Her winning story follows:

Mother handles race relations

It was threshing time in Kansas. Machines journeyed from farm to farm, belching smoke and hard wheat at each stop. A dozen men fed and tended a machine, and the womenfolk labored feverishly to feed the men.

In this threshing crew one summer, father included two Blacks. He did not judge a man by his color, but by his work. Now, working side by side with Blacks was one thing to the other members of the crew; eating with them was something else again.

Soon ominous rumblings reached the house. Word was spreading that some of the men did not intend to permit the Blacks to eat dinner at the table with them that noon.

Mother went on scalding eight roosters with a God-will-give-me-the-words look in her eye, while the fragrance of baking pies and fresh bread filled the air. Small excited girls shelled endless peas and discussed the ugly rumor, their first encounter with racial prejudice.

At noon, the table bulged with a glorious meal. The men had washed and were standing about waiting to be called. The air was as quiet and calm as before a storm. Children watched timidly from the corner of the washhouse; even they knew that a scene was expected.

And then mother appeared on the porch — double-chinned and be-aproned, but never more a queen. She went up to the two Blacks, led them to the table, and seated them at the head. Then she turned to the others and abruptly ended segregation with one quiet sentence: "Anyone else who would like to eat is welcome."

Gingerich cited by columnist William Safire

Nationally syndicated columnist William Safire used Owen Gingerich '51, as an authority for the correct pronunciation of the planet Uranus in his Feb. 16, 1986, column. Gingerich is Smithsonian professor of astronomy and the history of science at The Harvard Center for Astrophysics.

Safire's column was a response to the recent confusion in the media about the pronunciation of the seventh planet from the sun. Uranus was in the news as a result of the Voyager 2 space probe that passed near it in early February.

"I was raised in New York," wrote one of Safire's readers, "where the name of the planet Uranus was pronounced u-RAY-nus, not YURR-in-us, as the newscasters of late and the dictionary clearly say. I have polled everyone I know and they also say it incorrectly. Should I continue my mispronunciation?"

Since Safire didn't know the correct pronunciation, he said, "I turned to the world-renowned astrophysicist Owen Gingerich," who offered this explanation:

"The correct pronunciation of the seventh planet is 'YUR-in-us' . . . . The confusion of 'yur-A-nus' began when some high school teachers were afraid that students would titter at the correct pronunciation."

Paraphrasing Gingerich, Safire continued, "these teachers wanted to avoid the sound of the first two syllables, and caused a pronunciation in which the last two syllables were stressed. A generation later, the second combination of syllables made up a word that was more to be avoided than the first, and the prior pronunciation returned."

Specifically, he filled the posts of representative-at-large, lieutenant governor for the northern district, regional governor, member of the board of directors, national secretary and member of the admissions committee.

John has been cited by NATS for his years of service to the organization.

Alumnus collects Bibles

"The word of God is an all-consuming passion for Gerald Studer. Pastor of the Plains Mennonite Church in Lansdale, Pa., Studer contemplates the Bible, preaches from it, guides his life by its precepts . . . and he collects Bibles of every age, size and language."

So begins the January/February 1986 Franklin Mint Almanac article on Gerald Studer '49 and his collection of Bibles. While still a junior high school student, Studer started his collection that now numbers about 5,000 volumes.

The Goshen Biblical Seminary is the present home for many of Studer's volumes and the future home for all of them. "I've worked a whole lifetime putting my collection together," Studer said, "and I just couldn't see it scattered again. I have a great affection for the Mennonite faith — for the whole Christian church, for that matter — and I find great joy in being able to do something substantial for my denomination."

Lady Leafs in district tournament

GC basketball teams have completed their schedules, but the results were very different.

The women's team, coached by Linda 'Pert' Shetler, played what she considers to be "the best season I've had since I began coaching at GC." And the Lady Leafs did shine. Despite setbacks due to nagging injuries and a shortage of players, the team claimed the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) conference championship and became the first women's basketball team at GC to enter the NAIA District 21 tournament.

The team's regular season ended with a record of 16-7. In the playoffs they challenged No. 1-ranked Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis. That game resulted in GC bowing to IUPUI, 52-47.

Shetler said much of the team's strength was in seniors Brenda Ervin, Sally Hunsberger, Bonnie Miller and Jonell Kolb. "When those seniors were freshmen, we could envision a peak season by their fourth year," said Shetler. "This season was the way a senior year should go."

Ervin was top scorer for the team, averaging 14 points and three assists per game. She placed sixth in the district for her 70 percent free-throw performance.

Sophomore Dawn Gerber was the second leading scorer with an average of 13 points per game and the team's top rebounder, snagging an average of 11 per game.

The men, however, had a disappointing season with a mark of 3-18. Coach Ed Gore attributed the record to a tough playing schedule, persistent injuries and overall low morale in the program. "I think the results of this season point to the fact that our program is going to need some drastic changes in order to be successful," he said.

The team received outstanding play from seniors Tom Eby and Doug Gerber. Eby was top scorer with an average of 14 points per game and 8.4 rebounds. Gerber placed second with an average of 13.4 points per game.

Conference examines psychology from Anabaptist perspective

Psychology professors and students from Anabaptist colleges, Anabaptist-oriented researchers, teachers and students studying in public universities will meet to discuss psychology from an Anabaptist perspective March 14-16 at Goshen College.

Sponsored by the Goshen College psychology department, the conference will focus on issues in psychology, including how the marketplace distorts the practice of psychology. Emeritus professor of psychology and peace studies Atlee Beechy will speak. Registration is $3 for students and $5 for nonstudents.

Plan music, computer weeks

Faculty in the music and computer departments have begun planning programs for the more than 110 young people who will descend on the campus June 15-20 for Music and Piano Weeks and Computer Seminar.

For the 18th year, Music Week will bring a projected 60 high school students together for six days of music-making. Singers and instrumentalists will elect music courses and play in chamber ensembles, a choir, an orchestra and a jazz band. Professors Lon Sherer, Doyle Preheim and Philip Clemens will direct.

Piano Week for Teachers and Students June 16-20 will bring world-renowned organist Wolfgang Rübsam to campus as guest lecturer and recitalist for the week. He will visit the college after recording Bach's complete "French Suites" in Germany.

Lawrence Rast, a specialist in class piano techniques, will also lecture.

Goshen College piano faculty will work with teachers and junior high and senior high school pianists. Students do not need to participate with their teachers, but must have a teacher recommendation.

Finally, computer professors Carol Paris and Floyd Saner and biology professor Jim Miller will guide students through a week of programming practice and improvement during Computer Seminar.

Students will be divided into "BASIC," "Pascal" and "Advanced Pascal" classes according to their experience. All students will work in the Schertz Computer Center.

Palmer to address graduating class

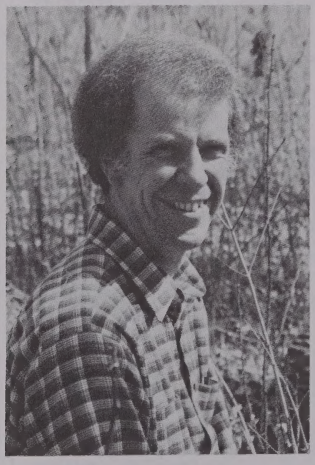
Sociologist and philosopher Parker J. Palmer will be the speaker for the 88th Goshen College commencement Sunday, April 20, addressing approximately 240 seniors and their families and friends.

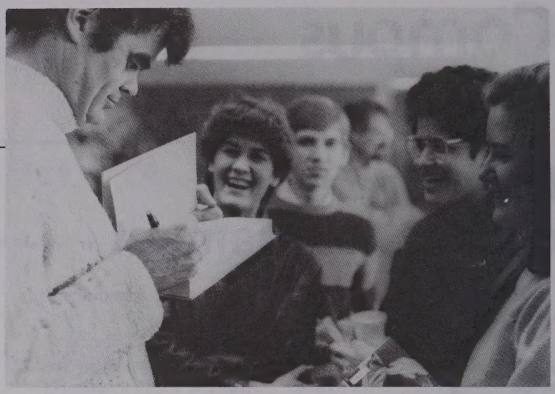
Palmer is the author of three widely used books on spirituality and education: The Promise of Paradox (Ave Maria Press), now in its third printing; The Company of Strangers (Crossroad Publishing Co.), recently issued in paperback, and To Know As We Are Known (Harper and Row). Harper and Row will publish a new work by Palmer, The Monastic Heart.

He currently is a staff member of the St. Benedict Center in Madison, Wis., where he teaches and directs the development of a new spiritual/educational community. He was dean of studies at Pendle Hill, a Friends adult study center and spiritual community near Philadelphia from 1974 to 1980.

From 1969 to 1974, Palmer was a senior associate at the Washington (D.C.) Center for Metropolitan Studies, associate professor of sociology at Georgetown University, and co-founder and co-director of the Institute for Public Life, a community organizing center in Silver Spring, Md.

A cum laude graduate of Carleton College, Palmer received a master's and a doctoral degree in sociology from the University of California at Berkeley. He has been a consultant for the Danforth Foundation, the Kettering Foundation and the Lilly Endowment. He directed the Danforth Foundation's "Study of Campus Ministries," and the National Council of Churches' project on "The Church, the University and Urban Life."





Lake Wobegon Comes to Goshen

Garrison Keillor, self-proclaimed shy person, said he was glad to be among Mennonites, "the shiest religious group in America," when he visited GC Jan. 14-15. The author of the bestseller Lake Wobegon Days and creator of "The Prairie Home Companion" radio show gave the S.A. Yoder Memorial lecture.

Of Mennonites, he said, "Nobody really knows who they are or who they're named after. Are they named after Mennen skin products or some German? We know they were burned at the stake, but not all of them."

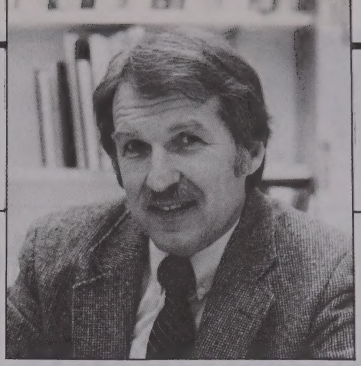
Keillor's appearance provoked a clamor for tickets (distributed free) to his Jan. 14 lecture unmatched by any in recent GC history. More than 2,000 persons attended the two lectures, including some who came from Ohio, eastern Pennsylvania and Kansas just for the speech.

During both lectures, Keillor told stories, read from Lake Wobegon Days and led the audience in singing. In both lectures, he asked the audience to sing hymn 606 from the Mennonite Hymnal. "What wonderful singing! I hope that whatever happens to you and to your church that you keep your wonderful singing tradition," Keillor said. "The basis of what it means to be in the faith is in the coming together. As long as you have that, you can figure the rest out."

In the Jan. 15 Yoder lecture, he read a story, "After a Fall." Noting that students from three area high schools were special guests, Keillor said, "Young people need to know that we love them. The 1960s were a grim decade, but when we chose to have children, we made the best choice that could be made."

Keillor autographed books for more than an hour after the Jan. 14 lecture and for two hours after the Jan. 15 lecture. Before returning to Minnesota, he was a luncheon guest at an Amish home near Nappanee.

The humorist left behind many satisfied fans and this observation: "Some people think it is difficult to be a Christian and to laugh, but I think it's the other way around. God writes a lot of comedy — it's just that he has so many bad actors."



Helping students hear the call

By Sanna Yoder

Vocation: "The action on the part of God of calling a person to exercise some special function, especially of a spiritual nature, or to fill a certain position; . . . the fact of being so called or directed towards a special work in life; natural tendency to, or fitness for, such work."

The Oxford English dictionary stacks lofty phrases on a word that to modern English users means little more than what a person does in the world of work.

Fred Litwiller, director of career services, preserves much of the original nuance of "vocation," a word derived from the Latin vocare — "to call." He helps career-conscious students discover how their faith, gifts and personal history "call" them to appropriate careers.

Hearing "the call" means being tuned into yourself, Litwiller said. He listens for more than "bolts out of the blue" when counseling students about career decisions. "Each person was born with certain gifts and patterns of living," he said. "What we try to do, then, is help people look at what career patterns emerge from their personal history, desires and goals."

When a student steps into Litwiller's office and asks, "What career am I suited for?" Litwiller reponds by asking his own questions. First, he wants to learn what makes the career-seeker tick. In the end, he is only helping the questioning student discover what she may already know but has not identified. "We want to help students put words to the diffuseness" they have about their talents, abilities and desires, he said.

Litwiller's own vocation is built on a Christian philosophy of doing "whatever I can to help people and make this a better world." His career, then, falls into "the broad area of education." He has been a teacher, coach and career counselor.

As a young person in a rural community, Litwiller didn't chart his future career. "Frankly, I wasn't aware of the different work possibilities available to me," he said, laughing. "I knew I wanted to work with people in small groups and individually. One of the ways I saw I could do that was through coaching sports."

After taking a degree in biology and physical education from Goshen College, Litwiller received a master's in guidance and counseling from Illinois State University. At GC, Litwiller has worked with a series of grants that have resulted in new guides for helping students with vocational choice. In addition, he helped initiate life planning projects for Mennonite congregations that want to establish mentoring programs.

He is now in his second year in career services, trying to "meet students where they are" in their academic and career plans. Meeting them means working with the decided and the undecided. Because many students in 1985 are particularly concerned about the jobs for which they will be qualified after college, Litwiller must be prepared to tell those students about current job market trends. "If someone comes in and asks, 'What can I do that can get me a great job in four years?,' I'm going to tell them that certain majors are known to connect with a larger job market."

Many more students "know they are here to learn," Litwiller noted. Those are the ones whose career paths are most exciting to work with. "Sometimes the end of the path is not as clear," he said. "Some students may be looking at certain career areas, but don't know what that will mean in terms of a specific job." For those students, Litwiller assures that "many times these students will find something more atuned to who they are because they have made the choice based on what they enjoyed and liked in the first place."

The career services office uses professionally-designed personality and aptitude "instruments" to help students learn more about themselves. Test results help students as they work with career counselors to choose courses of study and plan post-graduation goals. One test evaluates performance in an existing work situation. Another matches personality traits to different types of careers. There's even a computer program called "Discover" that matches an individual's characteristics and preferences to types of careers.

Yet after all the testing, students are rarely surprised by the results. "Believe it or not, I don't find many people who are going in a totally opposite direction from their true gifts and desires." When he does find incongruencies, "in many of those cases, someone else has been telling the student what he or she should be doing."

Career guidance, Litwiller believes, is a combination of "counseling and letting go." Though he wants to offer his expertise, the decision process should be a learning, growing experience for each individual.

Litwiller pointed out that professional career testing doesn't give foolproof answers to career questions. "I wish I could make absolute predictions for students and say 'no doubt about it, this is where you will end up," he sighed. "But I would rob people of further discernment and learning more about themselves."

Skills get a test in practicum setting

By Lois Landis Kurowski

Some college majors are self-explanatory: all the grandparents of nursing majors know what their grandchildren are studying and what they will do for a living when they graduate.

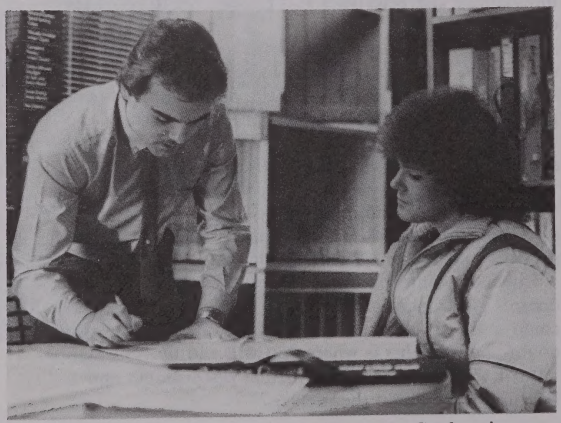
Other majors, however, make grandparents (and parents) fret when well-intentioned acquaintances ask, "And what is she going to do with that when she graduates?"

The practicum program, begun campus-wide in 1975-76, helps students in all majors discover what they can do with their majors, gives them experience in job hunting and helps them develop the skills they need for their chosen fields. It grew out of "field experience" requirements for students in social work, communication and art therapy, and the training student nurses receive.

Students in "non-practical" majors such as history as an investigative skill, sociology, Bible and religion and art often develop some very "practical" practicums and very useful skills.

Those majoring in history use their investigative skills in lawyers' offices, researching cases and picking up valuable job experience. Other history majors work in the Mennonite Historical Library.

The MHL draws a distinct line between students who work regularly in the library and history majors performing their practicums, John Oyer, MHL director, said. Practicum students spend much of their time learning how a research library operates, instead of performing everyday clerical work, as student assistants do. For instance, practicum students learn how the MHL chooses and bids on rare books offered for sale in Europe, Oyer said.



Writing up a customer's order is part of Keith B. Goodman's practicum at Snyder's Paints. He is a senior business major.

At left, Jill L. Owen, an early childhood education major, works at the Eighth Street Nursery School. Art major Susan Graber has gained practical experience working for GC information services.

Bible and religion majors often do their practicums in churches where they are already active, department chair Marlin Jeschke said. Students have worked as Mennonite Youth Fellowship sponsors and assistant pastors in churches. One student was a chaplain at Memorial Hospital, South Bend.

"There's such a wide variety. What they do depends a lot on their level of maturity and their gifts," Jeschke said. One student did his practicum in a Church of the Brethren congregation, preaching one Sunday, regularly helping plan worship and attending church board meetings.

Sociology majors are encouraged to do practicums that help them develop skills sociologists need, such as constructing a study question, observing and interviewing. Although they must do work that is different from what a social work major would do, they are expected to do work that also benefits the agency they work with.

The Victim-Offender Reconciliation Program in Elkhart has benefited from several practicums. As her practicum, Janet Shoemaker '82 wrote a guide to courtroom proceedings that VORP still gives to its courtroom observers. Another student devised a coding system to enable data from VORP intake questionnaires to be tabulated and analyzed.

Sandy Nickel '85 learned sociological research skills in depth in the fall trimester, by doing a practicum in London, England. Based at the London Mennonite Centre, she studied fellowship and the patterns of interaction in six area churches, including the London Mennonite Fellowship and Anglican, Baptist and charismatic "community" churches.

Keeping the Association for the Disabled of Elkhart County in touch with its clients is part of the practicum of Gerald D. Witmer, a senior social work major. He visits here with Peter, eight months, and his mother in their home.

Nickel attended worship services and conducted 10 interviews with church leaders. "Not only my project, but my understanding of Christianity, was enhanced immeasurably by the willingness of those I interviewed to give me a bit of time, as well as many gems of wisdom," Nickel said.

Art is another of those supposedly "impractical" majors that makes moms and dads nervous. Everyone admires the God-given gift of artistic talent, but some secretly believe that majoring in art is a direct route to starvation in a drafty garret.

However, much to the contrary, there always have been jobs available for skilled artists, Abner Hershberger, professor of art and art department chair, said. As the fields of video art and computer graphics grow beyond the experimental stages, opportunities for artists may expand. To make GC art majors more aware of job possibilities and sharpen their real-world job skills, the art department has emphasized the practicum experience and outlined specific programs for different art careers.

Virginia L. Bontrager, a December 1985 graduate, did a practicum last fall in interior design at Pletcher's Furniture Village, Nappanee.

"It's so helpful," Bontrager said. "The supervisors (at the practicum site) know you're a student, so they're very patient."

She observed the interior designers, and was impressed at how important interpersonal skills are for interior designers, who have to make presentations to clients. She also learned a lot about business procedure, and learned that her GC art background had given her a solid basis of skill, Bontrager said.

After her practicum, Bontrager was hired at Pletcher's to work in the advertising department. Between the practicum experience and her work there, she has discovered several directions she may take her art career.

The art department's "concentration areas" already existed before fall, 1985, but some art majors and potential art majors did not seem to be as aware of them as they should have been. Faculty members in the art department raised awareness of them by discussing them in pre-registration counseling, and the department issued a handout detailing the concentration areas.

"There's considerable excitement over our specifying these career concentrations," Hershberger said. "It's brought several students to my office to declare an art major."

Before the increased emphasis on career concentrations, some students "couldn't quite see where an art major might lead them," Hershberger said. "Many freshmen tend to come in asking what are the jobs available for art graduates."

The concentration areas are architecture, art education, art therapy, graphic design, interior design, production crafts, professional photography and studio art. The department plans to add courses in layout design, advanced graphic design and architectural drawing to strengthen those programs.

He also believes the new emphasis supports GC's goals of providing students with a solid liberal arts background. Unlike many other GC departments, the art department must compete for students with commercial art schools that offer a very technical training, oriented towards art skills.

By providing a more focused career concentration, the department can attract students who might enroll in such schools. The students benefit by being able to take courses in history, religion, business and other subjects that art schools don't offer. The SST experience also is excellent because it exposes young artists to other cultures with different aesthetic values, he said.

Faculty

English prof selected for Fulbright

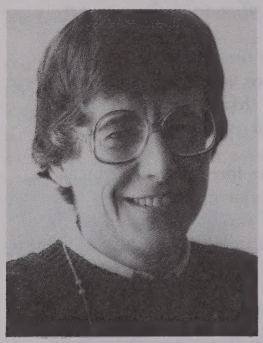
Rosemary A. Wyse, Goshen College assistant professor of English, has been named a Fulbright lecturer by the Board of Foreign Scholarships, which administers the Fulbright educational exchange program.

Wyse will lecture on teaching English as a foreign language in Uruguay during the month of July, under the sponsorship of the Uruguayan National Council of Secondary Education.

A member of the Goshen College faculty since 1978, Wyse is a 1958 graduate of Goshen College and received a master's degree in 1971 from Arizona State University. She also has studied at Indiana University, Bloomington, and Bowling Green (Ohio) State University.

Wyse also has served as a librarian for the General Conference Mennonite Church in Uruguay, Paraguay, Argentina and Japan. She was a member of the Goshen Community English as a Second Language Council from 1979 until 1983, and of the Mennonite Central Committee Great Lakes Subcommittee on Refugee Concerns in 1983.

Since 1980, she has had primary responsibility for teaching English and American culture to teachers from Sichuan Province, People's Republic of China, who study at GC for one year. Currently, she is on an extended trip to Japan, India and Europe.



Wyse is the sixth person who has received a Fulbright grant while a member of the Goshen College faculty. Previous grant-winners were Roy Umble, S. A. Yoder, Carl Kreider, Roman Gingerich and Henry Weaver.

Hershberger Exhibit in N.Y.

The work of Abner Hershberger, professor of art, was featured in a one-man show Feb. 15-March 16 at Mount St. Mary College, Newburgh, N.Y. Hershberger attended an opening reception Feb. 15 and spoke on his works Feb. 16. Included in the show were serigraphs, etchings, collagraphs and lithographs.

Yoder joins admissions staff

Lisa J. (Clemmer) Yoder, a 1981 graduate of Goshen College, has joined the admissions staff as a counselor for the Indiana-Michigan district. She had been a social worker on the staff of Fountainview Place of Elkhart, a nursing home, since 1983. Her parents are Roy and Jean Clemmer, Souderton, Pa., and she is married to Gary W. Yoder '79.

A resident of Middlebury, Yoder belongs to East Goshen Mennonite Church, where she is a sponsor of the MYF and a member of the fellowship committee.

Profs to lead Ireland, Italy tours

Alumni and others may enroll in two summer study-tours being taught by GC professors.

John Fisher, professor of English, will teach "Irish Literature in Ireland," English 305, June 15 through July 5. The tour will begin in Dublin and visit County Meath, Sligo and County Wicklow. Emphasis will be on locales used by 20th-century Irish writers James Joyce, W. B. Yeats, J. M. Synge, Seamus Heaney, Peter Fallon and Mary Lavin.

Abner Hershberger, professor of art, will teach a course about art during the Renaissance era in Florence, Italy, June 20 through July 10. Group members will stay in a 14th-century villa in the Tuscany hills and visit the Uffizi Galeria, Pitti Palazzo, Duomo, the Palazzo del Bargello, the Medici Chapel and the cities of Siena and Pisa. Works by da Vinci, Michelangelo, Ghiberti, Botticelli, Donatello and others will be viewed in their original context.

Fisher or Hershberger will provide more information upon request.

Changing direction at midlife

By Lois Landis Kurowski

When people around Goshen College think it's time for a change in their careers, they often end up in Len Geiser's office.

Not because Geiser is a career counselor or a personnel specialist — he isn't. It's just that Len Geiser managed to make a highly successful midlife career change, and other people want to know his "secret."

Now GC associate professor of business and director of management development programs, only 10 years ago Geiser was the owner and operator of a chain of retail appliance stores based in Orrville, Ohio.

Geiser was an "S.O.B" — son of the boss — who'd grown up with the assumption that he would take over the appliance store his father founded, which he did after graduating from GC in 1957. Len Geiser found a lot of satisfaction in the retail appliance-electronics business, buying stores, expanding the business and watching employees develop their skills.

However, at a 1968 seminar, he heard a speech on goal-setting for businesses and individuals and began to think about setting goals for himself.

"One of the goals I had for myself was that by the time I was 50, I wanted to be doing something else," Geiser said. He told his wife and started thinking about ways to achieve the goal. "I realized that I would never achieve my goal if I didn't start training someone else," he remembered. That "someone else" was his brother-in-law, who already was working in the business.

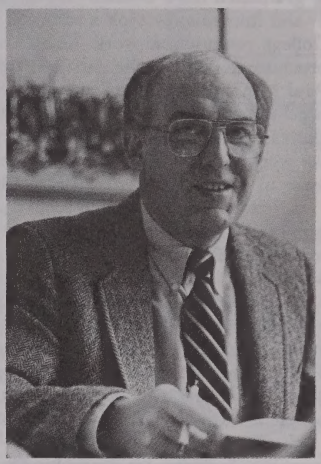
The transition lasted almost nine years. As his brother-in-law became more skilled, Geiser pursued another one of his goals, becoming a consultant. He began to do consulting work for other appliance dealers, and eventually for the National Association of Retail Dealers of America (NARDA).

With the consent and support of his wife and three children, Geiser sold the business to his brother-in-law in April, 1977. He was more than eight years ahead of his self-imposed schedule.

NARDA asked him to work as a staff management consultant and seminar leader, and he spent two busy years crisscrossing the United States in that job. In 1976, though, a vacation in Africa gave him a new goal. While traveling in Zaire with wife Linea, he visited a Mennonite Economic Development Association project.

Although he had been a Mennonite businessman for 20 years, he had never heard of MEDA or of the Mennonite Industry and Business Associates (MIBA), a similar group. He began to think of how he and his wife had wanted to perform a term of Voluntary Service for the church right after college graduation, but hadn't.

Through contact with MIBA, Geiser was offered the job as the group's first executive director, and took it as a form of "voluntary service," relocating his family to Goshen. After two years, he managed himself out of a job, helping MIBA merge with MEDA.



Geiser then started working on a master's degree in business administration at the University of Chicago, to enhance his business knowledge. At that time, Delmar G. Good, chair of the GC business and economics department, renewed an effort to recruit him as a faculty member. Good worked out a system to let him study for his M.B.A. while teaching full time, and Len Geiser took the next step in his midlife odyssey.

Despite his success in changing careers, Geiser doesn't believe there's any "one answer" to the question of whether, and how, to make a midlife career change.

"People underestimate themselves so much," he said. When he finds a fledgling career-changer in his office, he asks the person to tell him what career she would like to have in her "wildest dreams and fantasies." He also asks what the person thinks her weaknesses are, and what she would have to do to improve those weaknesses.

"I try to encourage people to take risks," Geiser added. "Some people looked at what I did and thought I was crazy as a corncob."

Mid-life is a good time for career change, because people have accumulated experience, developed skills, and "may find themselves asking, as I did, 'Do I want to do this for the next 20 years of my life?' " Family responsibilities may diminish, too, as children grow up and leave home.

However, Geiser warns that changing careers is no miracle cure for midlife boredom. Anyone with "a false concept of what another job might bring for them" is headed for trouble, he believes. "Don't do it as an escape from a bad work situation, and don't do it to make a lot more money," he warned. Bad work situations may be traced to the person's own inability to get along with other people, so that a "bad work situation" follows him wherever he works.

Careers and vocations

By Victor Stoltzfus

I graduated from Goshen College 30 years ago this spring and immediately took a summer job doing Goshen College promotional work. One of my tasks was to write a brochure about a particular department. When President Paul Mininger saw that I used the word "career" in the brochure copy, he suggested I find some other term to express the way Goshen College prepares its graduates for the world of work. Somehow "career" failed to reflect our sense of ourselves as a service-oriented people of God.

If "career" was a bit too secular and pretentious, I suppose "calling" would have been too pious. I don't remember how I solved the puzzle of finding an advertising word that had integrity for our tradition.

Now in 1986, the editor of the Bulletin has written me a note, suggesting that I "play with the idea of Christian vocation and how it relates to the concept of a career." There is still the sense at Goshen College that "career" doesn't quite capture all we want to say as a Christian people about how we relate to the world of work.

Historically, the word "vocation" had a religious meaning, but its most general usage has become secularized. The first dictionary definition of vocation is simply an occupation. The third is a "divine call to God's service or the Christian life" (Random House Dictionary).

In reviewing Alan Richardson's fine study, The Biblical Doctrine of Work, I was reminded again of how casually the New Testament refers to occupations such as tentmaking, silversmithing, medicine, merchants, carpenters or slaves. "It is hardly too much to say that the Bible is uninterested in the various professions and occupations in which (people) engage for the sake of making a livelihood, provided that they are honest. . . ."

Vocation or the biblical idea of "calling" is what Christians do to build up the Church as a consequence of being gifted by God. Richardson refers to Ephesians 4:11, "He gave some to be apostles. . . . How rarely do lay people today think of themselves as God's gifts to the Church — the prophets, evangelists, teachers and so on."

"I am a gifted person whom God has given to the church." Can you imagine the power of thousands of young people viewing themselves in that way and making life decisions on that basis? Imagine congregations who would not only teach right and wrong, but help youth discover their own gifts and where they might best use their future possibilities. Imagine colleges that would help youth develop those gifts and inform youth of the hundreds of settings in our nation and world where they could make a difference in building the church as a sign of the Kingdom.

A secularized careerist might say, "I am labor, a factor of production, seeking the quickest and highest personal return on the smallest investment possible in the economic marketplace. I belong to myself and I'll call the shots." Or in a totalitarian society, "You are labor, and the state will train you and assign you to work that best fulfills state goals."

Alexander Astin has been surveying the entering freshman class in America for the past 18 years. He has trend data on personal values and career choices. "Careers that have shown increasing popularity during recent years do not generally require education beyond the bachelor's degree and are all relatively high paying. By contrast, the careers that showed decreasing popularity either require advanced training and/or are relatively low paying. It is also interesting to note that the careers that are decreasing in popularity account for almost all of what we have come to know as 'human service' occupations: teaching, nursing, social work, law enforcement, and the clergy."

As a "human service" graduate, I have a natural loyalty to my own kind. Although salaries are modest in our occupational sector, the opportunities in these areas to nourish gifts that are valuable to church and society, are becoming more inviting.

And as our nation has felt the strains of transition to a world labor force in a global economy, I have broadened my view of what "human service" means. Entrepreneurs serve humans when they create jobs and when their taxes pay the bills for schools and other community services. Their profitability can be a source of philanthropy for the multimillion-dollar ministries of the church, including private colleges.

Scientists develop new technologies that conserve resources and preserve jobs. The musician, the artist and the storyteller serve our humanity when they help us transcend the dullness of everyday life. (One of Jesus' gifts in his public ministry was artfully crafted stories.) These occupations also develop the gifts that God uses to get things done in the world.

To the extent that students and their parents think about education as a major investment of time and money, they become intensely interested in how that investment will pay off in jobs and future income. I respect that concern. At Goshen College we believe we are providing an education that has both tangible and intangible values. We are doing more to address the concerns of advising, job counseling and job placement.

At the same time, our vision and mission are as large as that of the philosopher Art Holmes who writes: "The human vocation is far larger than the scope of any job a person may hold because we are human persons created in God's image, to honor and serve God and (others) in all that we do, not just in the way we earn a living."

Careers then are a means to the larger end of Christian vocation.

A special issue

This special issue of the Bulletin is devoted to the Mennonite Historical Library. In many respects the MHL is a gift of Goshen College to the Mennonite Church. Its resources have helped mold Mennonite identity and what Harold Bender called "The Anabaptist Vision."

Speaking of the MHL, Professor George H. Williams of Harvard said, "a non-Mennonite can perhaps with more credibility than a Mennonite observe that there is no other American denominational family so actively engaged in the history of its origins and its interconfessional relations down through five centuries as that represented by Goshen College . . . ." In large measure that study takes place through the resources of the MHL and the Archives of the Mennonite Church.

MHL welcomes non-Mennonites

The Mennonite Historical Library isn't just for Mennonites. About half the people who use it are from other denominations. Their number includes scholars doing research on the Anabaptists, students from other colleges who are writing papers on Mennonites or their own denomination, or genealogists who have heard about the MHL's extensive genealogical collection.

Some are just curious, like the man from the carnival that went through town. He stopped in just because he wanted to find out more about the Mennonites.

If you come to campus, visit the MHL. Being a Mennonite is not a requirement for enjoying its riches.

Illustrations from the MHL

Scattered throughout this issue are engravings, woodcuts and printers' marks from a variety of books in the Mennonite Historical Library. They illustrate an aspect of the MHL's collection that is less well known, and yet one that can be very rewarding to study. The illustrations are a good way to introduce children to church history. We hope they make adults and children interested in exploring the MHL's holdings in art and artifacts.

Joseph Springer named MHL curator

Joseph Springer, a 1980 GC graduate and son of Nelson and Betty Springer, joins the Mennonite Historical Library May 1 as curator. He comes from the University of Kansas, Lawrence, where he has been assistant special collections librarian at the Spencer Research Library since November, 1983.

A history major at GC, Springer received a master of science in library science from the Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C., in 1982, and a master of arts degree in history from the same school in 1983. He specialized in rare books and cataloging and in the history of the Reformation and the French Revolution.

Mennonite Historical Library makes history live

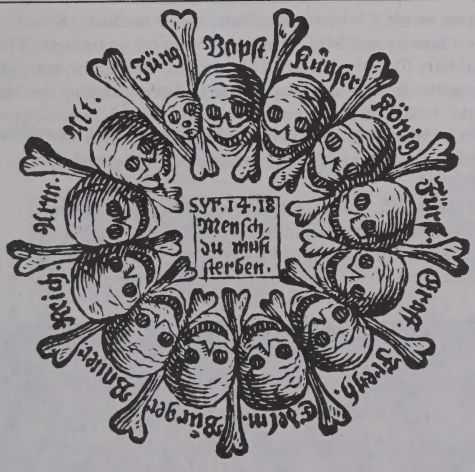
By Lois Landis Kurowski

When Nelson P. Springer first began to work in the Mennonite Historical Library as a Goshen College student, the library was a locked room in the Administration Building. To perform his duties, Springer had to be admitted to the room by a librarian with a key, who locked up after he left.

Today, of course, the MHL occupies most of the third floor of Good Library, open to all who care to visit. However, the story of the MHL is not only the story of how the library's physical facilities have improved. It is also the story of how, through the efforts of many people, the MHL has helped Mennonites and Amish "unlock" their cultural heritage and achieve a new appreciation of their past.

Although it was officially founded in 1906 by the Goshen College Alumni Association, the Mennonite Historical "Library" was actually only a few shelves containing about 80 books in 1912. The collection languished until 1924, when a man with a vision of what Mennonites could gain from studying their heritage came to Goshen College.

He was Harold S. Bender, fresh from a year of studying in Europe. Accompanied on the Atlantic crossing by Ernst Correll, an experienced researcher, Bender came to GC



This wood cut illustrating the commonality of death, calls to mind the dance of death theme popular with artists during the Middle Ages and Reformation. It was used in a Mennonite German devotional anthology published in the first half of the 18th century. In the center is the inscription, "Man, you must die. Sirach 14:18." Clockwise from top center: pope, emperor, king, prince, count, lord, nobleman, citizen, peasant, rich, poor, old, young.

Elizabeth and Harold Bender

inspired to collect and catalog the literature of North American Mennonites. Correll also taught at the college for some time.

Bender's quest was not without drama, as he explained in the preface of Two Centuries of American Mennonite Literature, written in 1929. Rare-book dealers in the United States usually did not carry such books, so Bender had to look for them in private homes while on his travels for various church agencies.

"In these five years, through the gracious consent and aid of innumerable kind friends, I have sought the desired volumes in hundreds of homes in the more populous Mennonite centers of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ontario, Ohio and Indiana. It has been on the whole a pleasant and delightful search. . . . The tragedies of book-collecting have pursued me likewise. It has been my lot to hear many times the doleful story of recent selling of old papers and books to the junk dealers, or of burning as rubbish at the last house cleaning."

Bender's tirelessness paid rich rewards. He spotted a Froschauer Bible in 1927 in the home of Fulton County, Ohio, Bishop E. L. Frey. Frey donated it to the library in 1940. Parts of the Bible were printed in 1524, 1525, and 1529.

Because Bender had carried out such an exhaustive search, the MHL's collection doubled between 1930 and 1945. When World War II ended, many rare books came onto the antiquarian book market in Europe because of the economic deprivation caused by the war. The MHL acquired many books, quite a few from the private collections of two eminent Mennonite scholars, one Dutch and one German.

In the 40 years since World War II, the MHL has continued to grow, a blessing that has brought its own set of challenges. The staff also grew, but not at a pace fast enough to keep up with the challenges of answering scholars' queries, handling the administrative complications of growth and just keeping up with the technical aspects of maintaining such a collection.

John S. Oyer, now MHL director, joined the staff during the 1976-77 school year as scholar-researcher, a particularly appropriate position for him because he also edits the Mennonite Quarterly Review. Oyer counsels researchers who wish to use the MHL, especially graduate students who need the advice of a skilled Anabaptist scholar to help them reshape their research proposals to fit available source material.

His work has been invaluable in freeing the other staff members to deal with an increasingly pressing problem: the battle of the cataloging backlog. The collection's growth from an estimated 3,500 volumes in 1948 to more than 36,000 volumes today would be evidence only of ability to accumulate if someone weren't there to organize the collection and analyze what it holds. For more than 40 years, that person has been Nelson Springer.

Most people don't consider librarians to be adventurers, but the achievements of Springer and those who have helped him through the years are easily the equivalent of Indiana Jones finding the lost ark.

As computer owners know, information is useless if it can't be found. Librarians call the process of recording data about a holding and analyzing that information cataloging. The MHL belongs to OCLC (Online Computer Library Center), a computer databank that eliminates duplicate cataloging efforts by libraries. A OCLC member library can get catalog cards printed out for current publications at the touch of a button.

However, such cards aren't available for most of the MHL's uncataloged material. For that material, Springer and his helpers must create original cataloging. With the aid of a National Endowment for the Humanities grant, the MHL carried out "Project Access," a three-year cataloging effort that saw 7,800 holdings cataloged, more than 60 percent of them requiring original cataloging.

The library now is working on the second year of another three-year NEH grant. By using paraprofessionals, the MHL was able to catalog 4,000 titles in the 12 months ending March 31.

What Springer and his team do calls for more than just writing down the information in the front of the book. Original cataloging may entail reading the book to determine the appropriate classifications for it, or sometimes even doing special research to determine who wrote it or where it was printed.

Such work is the lock-picking of librarianship. What value a book or pamphlet — or a photograph — might have to a scholar is not always its straightforward content. Springer hopes the MHL someday can compile special catalogs, classifying holdings by publication dates, the printer's marks, the paper's watermarks, special illustrations or the bindings, for instance.

For no librarian can know now what aspect of a work, or which works, will be the highly sought-out sources of the future. As Springer remembers, "It came as kind of a surprise to me" when a Bluffton, Ind., medical clinic started borrowing MHL materials several years ago. Then an Elkhart County Health Department employee started visiting the library and explained to Springer that the clinic and the health department were using Amish genealogies to trace certain health problems in Amish families — something the genealogies' authors probably never envisioned.

So the MHL team continues digging, sorting and classifying. Whenever Nelson Springer and his fellow workers catalog a book, they know they're unlocking a storehouse that, for someone, will be filled with treasure.

"... [the MHL] is the best specialized library for this field of study in the USA. ..."

The Mennonite Historical Library

Unique among the rare

By Judith M. Davis

Although many college and university libraries contain materials on the Radical Reformation, none has the extensive holdings and rare items that distinguish Goshen's Mennonite Historical Library.

Three other libraries in the world have holdings comparable to the MHL: The University of Amsterdam Library (Mennonite Collection); the Mennonite Library and Archives (MLA) of Bethel College, North Newton, Kan., and Eastern Mennonite College's Mennonite Historical Library.

Each library has its own distinctive character. The Goshen Mennonite Historical Library has the largest collection of its type, that is, a broad range of cultural as well as religious materials and the most generous proportion of recent materials. The Amsterdam holdings are predominantly Dutch. EMC also specializes in Dutch materials, while the Kansas holdings are heavily Russian Mennonite.

Besides its size, what makes the MHL unique?

- More rare books (16th century and later) and the addition of more than 100 rare Dutch Mennonite books per year for the past four years;
- a larger body of primary materials, including manuscripts, accessible in the nearby Archives of the Mennonite Church;
- a more international, inter-Mennonite focus, both in the collection and in resources available in the Archives, particularly in regard to international relief work and refugee resettlement;
- more specialized encyclopedias, dialect dictionaries and reference materials;
- a greater volume of material on the Radical Reformation;
- a greater number of antiquarian items;
- the Hartzler collection of 2,800 rare music books;
- more materials on the Amish in Europe and America;
- a more complete collection of Swiss-South German Mennonite writings;
- a larger body of 16th- to 18th-century material related to Anabaptists;
- an acquisitions program for current publications on Mennonites that is the most comprehensive of all the Mennonite-related college libraries.

As if these items were not enough, the MHL is outstanding in its collection of 380 current periodicals from every continent but Antarctica; the total number of periodical titles exceeds 3,000.

In addition to the importance of its holdings and the great volume of its materials on the Radical Reformation, the MHL offers unusual opportunities for researching a number of Reformation topics in one place, as well as the opportunity of conferring with a staff who have worked with the materials for decades and who are trained to assist researchers, from high school students doing term papers to internationally known historians and theologians preparing books.

Each visitor is welcomed and made to feel at home with the kind of helpfulness and hospitality that make the MHL — again — unique among others of its kind.

ANNO M DC. VII.

The inscription reads, "Fifty-four Important Reasons Why the Anabaptists Should Not Be Tolerated in the Country / set forth by Dr. Christopher Andreas Fischer, Pastor at Veldsperg. Exodus 22. With the Holy Roman Emperor's license. Printed at Ingolstadt by Andreas Angermeyer, Anno 1607." The work is a polemic against Anabaptists, particularly the Hutterian Brethern. The woodcut is a cartoon linking the Hutterian Brethern with sorcery and evil, while at the same time it recognizes their highly skilled craftsmanship. The dovecote (birdhouse) shows apartments for several families in one structure representing the Hutterites' communal living style. The witches broomsticks, howling dogs, bats and owl represeent the "evil" of which Fischer accuses them. The skills that made the Hutterian Brethern welcome with the general population are represented by tools for a tailor, fuller, baker, mason, hosemaker, tanner, hatmaker, teamster, carpenter, butcher, apothecary and potter. The conclusion to which Fischer comes is that the teachings of the Hutterian Brethren combined with their craftsmanship become a form of sorcery for which Catholic rulers have justification in Exodus to drive them out of the country.

Illustrations From the MHL

Right: The first of one hundred emblems from De Bykorf des Gemoeds (The Beehive of the Conscience) by Dutch Mennonite Jan Luiken published in 1711. Emblem books combine a series of engravings, didactic poems and quotations (often Scripture passages) on a theme related to the title of the book. The title of this engraving is, "The Vessel, after you have set sail." The poem compares ships arriving at different ports according to the way the sails are set with souls reaching heaven or hell according to the course chosen by the individual.

The Mennonite Historical Library

A center for major research

By John S. Oyer

Among the topics most frequently researched in the Mennonite Historical Library, Anabaptism comes quickly to the fore. Scholars from a wide range of graduate schools have done basic and supporting research on, for example, Marpeck's Christology, the theological significance of Sattler, personal ethics of the Anabaptists, their views on the grace of God, their views on baptism, their hermeneutics, their views on the sword and political order, their social history, their derivation from and relation to German mysticism, their place within the larger Radical Reformation, their relation to Lutheran Reformers or to the Reformed, their relation to Erasmus, as well as many studies on individual Anabaptist leaders.

But the MHL has rich source material far beyond Anabaptism. Researchers have used it for topics on Lutheran or Calvinist Reformers, or on Catholics, but especially on a wide range of topics within post-Anabaptist Mennonite or Amish or Hutterite life and thought. Hutterite Ordnungen (Rules for Hutterian society), Old Order Mennonite and Amish use of Gelassenheit (yieldedness) as means for boundary maintenance within their own societies, factors that lead to physiological and emotional stress among the Amish, the Russian Mennonites as political prisoners, higher education's growth among a particular group of 20th-century Mennonites in North America — all these as well as studies of particular groups in time and place (Waterlander Mennonites in the early 17th century, for example) have been researched in the MHL.

Scholars have come from schools throughout the world to carry on some part of their research. To list a few outside North America: Cambridge (England); Marburg, Tübingen, Heidelberg, Kiel, Aachen (West Germany); Lund (Sweden); Paris (France); Aberdeen (Scotland); Utrecht (Netherlands); Natal (South Africa).

North American universities represented include: Boston, Notre Dame, Chicago, Michigan, Tulane, Illinois State, Purdue, California at Santa Barbara, Berkeley and Los Angeles, Vanderbilt, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Roosevelt, Manitoba, New York at Albany, Indiana, American, Queen's at Kingston, Duke, Waterloo, Arizona State and Harvard. Undergraduate students from an equally wide range of institutions have come to do research.

Many topics remain to be researched. Among them are: music (although a dozen excellent studies already exist) of both Anabaptists and subsequent groups, including Mennonite borrowings from other religious traditions; economic strengths and/or weaknesses of Mennonites compared with their neighbors in Prussia, South Germany, the Netherlands, colonial America, etc., each in different time periods; economic reasons for emigration, from many places; folk art; religious and/or social acculturation of Mennonites or Amish in many times and places; special contributions of Dutch Mennonites to belles-lettres and to the plastic arts; medicinal practices of Amish and Mennonites, especially the herbal medicine of empirics; and studies of congregational religious, social and economic life. These are only a few of the possibilities that come to mind.

Although the work of doctoral students and scholars is very important in academia, the research by people who have not been trained to do research is much more common. Many of approximately 4,300 historical treatises in our files were researched and written by such people. They constitute one of the richest clusters of holdings that we have, including as they do, literally hundreds of congregational histories, for example.

The MHL has attracted hundreds of people who read, research and then write their papers, with or without publishing, merely because they are interested in a specific topic. Indeed, their enthusiasm is contagious; they are our favorite clients. This group includes high school and junior high school students, some of whom come, not because they are compelled to by a class assignment, but because of their own interest. Some of these in turn become first-class genealogists, working with a passion and accuracy that is highly gratifying. Others among them produce excellent regional or local Mennonite histories. We are grateful that they find materials in the MHL to feed their interest.

Conrad: a familiar face in the MHL

By Laurie Neumann Nafziger

He's hooked.

Retired schoolteacher Lloyd Conrad '38 is fascinated with historical research. He loves searching through old books and government records in an effort to piece together the past. Everyone in the Mennonite Historical Library knows him by name.

His interest in the past has produced the Conrad genealogy, a history of the Holdeman Mennonite Church (Wakarusa, Ind.) and information for several of J. C. Wenger's historical books.

However, his major achievement is yet to be finished. Lloyd is writing a history of the Beech Mennonite Church, Louisville, Ohio, the church of his childhood and youth. He expects the history to be a sizable book of more than 200 pages. The church will publish and sell the work.

So, how did it happen that a mathematics teacher became a regular visitor to the MHL?

It all started with Indiana's teacher-licensing regulation that required secondary teachers to have a second major. In college Lloyd's first major was mathematics, but he also enjoyed social studies. Consequently, he took a couple of Harold S. Bender's courses in church history and specifically Mennonite history.

His interest was piqued.

While still a student, he spent many hours in the MHL, then housed in the Administration Building. Of obvious interest to him was the Conrad genealogy. Working with the obituary files, he found information that helped to fill in many of the "blanks" in this genealogy.

After graduation, Lloyd spent most of his professional life teaching mathematics in the Elkhart County and South Bend area, with stints also in Civilian Public Service and as assistant registrar at Goshen College. However, in his spare time, he continued to work at historical research.

Lloyd has learned to "follow any lead you can find." Sources include obituary files, books, letters, notes from ministers' assemblies, genealogies, deed records, census records, cemeteries and other history buffs willing to share information.

The work can be painstaking in that it's sometimes difficult to know when you have the "complete" story. "Mathematics is an exact science, and maybe I want too much evidence and support sometimes," Lloyd admits. "There comes a time though when you decide this is enough and wrap it up."

So it is with a sense of satisfaction that Lloyd now finds himself ready to wrap up the Beech Mennonite Church history. But being the historical researcher that he is, one is inclined to believe that Lloyd will continue to dig into history long after the book is published.

". . . both in terms of quality and quantity the manuscripts, books, etc. at the Mennonite Historical Library deserve expert processing and bibliographical description. The library is known to me particularly through its printed books from the 16th and 17th centuries."

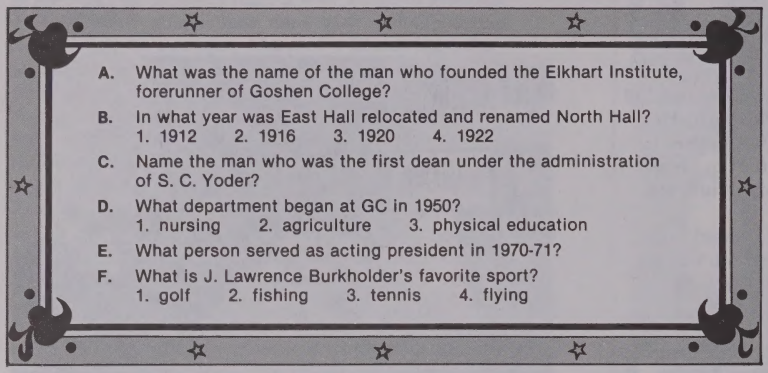
GC trivia



A. What was the name of the man who founded the Elkhart Institute, forerunner of Goshen College?
B. In what year was East Hall relocated and renamed North Hall?
1. 1912 2. 1916 3. 1920 4. 1922
C. Name the man who was the first dean under the administration of S. C. Yoder?
D. What department began at GC in 1950?
1. nursing 2. agriculture 3. physical education
E. What person served as acting president in 1970-71?
F. What is J. Lawrence Burkholder's favorite sport?
1. golf 2. fishing 3. tennis 4. flying

The November issue of the Bulletin will be something completely different — a Goshen College version of Trivial Pursuit, with questions about the faculty, students and history of Goshen College. (See sample game card above.)

To make the game as interesting as possible, we need the help of our alumni and friends in formulating questions. Here's your chance to stump your classmates and win a prize, too.

The questions may be fill-in-the-blank or multiple choice and can be on any topic — faculty, staff, buildings, extracurricular activities, sports, music, campus clubs and organizations or students. Please indicate the appropriate time period for each question so we can group them into general categories based on the presidential years:

A. The Elkhart Institute and Noah Byers years, 1894-1912
B. The Hartzler, Lapp, Reist, Detweiler, Kauffman years, 1913-1923
C. The S.C. Yoder years, 1923-1940
D. The Ernest Miller years, 1940-1954
E. The Paul Mininger years, 1954-1970
F. The J. Lawrence Burkholder years, 1971-1984
G. The Stoltzfus years, 1984- (Bonus category)

Since most students were on campus for only four years, we suggest multiple choice answers for most questions to give those who weren't here a chance to guess the answer. Fill-in-the blank would be more appropriate for easier questions.

Questions can be taken from John Umble's history of Goshen College or from your own experience on campus. For example, you might ask,

"What professor was known for wearing bow ties?

a. Paul Bender
b. Guy Hershberger
c. Olive Wyse
d. Art Smucker

Prizes: There will be prizes for the three people who send in the largest number of useable questions. First prize is a ceramic work by Professor of Art Marvin Bartel; second prize is a Goshen College sweatshirt; third prize is your choice of a Jazz Band, Chorale or Bill Crofut album.

Send your GC Trivia questions to: GC Trivia, Goshen College, Goshen, IN 46526. Deadline for receiving questions is Sept. 30, 1986.

Contributions offset tuition discount

It's that time of the year.

Colleges and universities across the nation are announcing their tuition rates for next fall. And most of them have announced increases that exceed the nation's inflation rate — some by as much as 11 percent.

However, Goshen has chosen another course of action — one that involves some financial risk.

First, we limited next fall's tuition increase to a modest 4.5 percent. In addition, we offered to eliminate this increase and freeze tuition at this year's price for those who made a deposit by May 1. This policy represents a loss to the college of $240 per student.

How can this work?

Two ways. First, by attracting more students. We know that students and their parents consider cost when choosing a college.

Second, the generous support of our alumni and friends to the annual fund will help offset the loss. We appreciate gifts already received this year but the annual fund goal has yet to be met. As of March 31, we need an additional $481,000 to reach our $1.5 million goal. We invite your support in this important effort.

Gift to MHL

On April 18, 1986, Silas '30 and Esther Meck Smucker '33 gave a generous gift to the Mennonite Historical Library to enable it to secure a matching grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. Money from both of these sources will now be used to continue the second three-year project of backlog cataloging. The MHL staff is gratified by the generosity of this gift.

Miller publishes nursing text

Some people respond to a need by doing something about it.

Anna Nofziger Miller '55 is one of those people. As assistant professor of nursing at DePauw University, Anna was dissatisfied with the texts she used with her first-year students. So she and colleague Barbara A. Norton, decided to write a better book.

After six years of research and preparation, Skills for Professional Nursing Practice: Communication, Physical Appraisal and Clinical Techniques is now ready for distribution.

The textbook deals with both the physical techniques of nursing and the more subjective challenges of the career, such as verbal and non-verbal communication with patients, listening, offering assistance, interviewing and awareness of self in the nursing role.

Hartley Workshop attracts music educators

"Enriching Musical Activities" was the theme of the eighth annual Mary K. Hartley '60 Memorial Workshop held in March at the college.

Donald P. Sheeler '65 led the workshop. He's been actively involved in music education for 18 years and is now taking a sabbatical year from his duties as a music teacher in an elementary school. The methods of Kodaly, Orff and Suzuki strongly influenced his teaching.

The GC departments of music and early childhood education sponsored the workshop. Attending were music educators and those working in nursery schools, kindergartens and elementary schools.

The Hartley Memorial Workshop was established by Mary Kay's parents, George and Luella Amstutz Gerber '35 in her honor. Mary Kay was working in music education for children in Sweden at the time of her death in 1975. Further contributions to her memorial fund are welcome.

Kathleen Newcomer Springer, Farmer City, Ill., returned to teaching in 1983 after 10 years as a full-time mother. She writes: "I feel fortunate that when I was ready to re-enter the profession a high school Spanish position opened up close to home.

"I am teaching Spanish I, II and III at Blue Ridge High School in Farmer City. This past summer I helped organize and chaperone a group of students on a two-week trip to Spain, England and France. I find it a challenge to stimulate high school students, many of whom know very little about world geography or other cultures, to begin to look beyond their own small worlds to the larger world community. This interest often corresponds with learning a foreign language."

Senior Salute

Continuing the tradition...

Seniors revive class gift

Some traditions, thankfully, die hard.

The GC Class of '86 has revived a tradition that hadn't been followed for nine years — that of a class gift to the college. The Class of '77 was the last to make a class gift.

Senior Sally Hunsberger headed the drive, during which 22 seniors asked their peers to contribute to the cause. The class raised $1,222.50 to be used for a freshman scholarship.

Six majors had 100 percent participation, and altogether the class had an impressive 84 percent participate rate.

Hunsberger was enthused about the results. "Overall, the drive brought the class together," she said. "It makes us seem more a part of GC. It made the college ours."

Thomas and Ann Schrock Mooney, Portland, Ore., Sean Michael and Evan Patrick, Dec. 29.

Rodney and Brenda Nofziger Short, Fayette, Ohio, Ashley Nicole, March 22.

Herschel and Betty Helmuth Stauffer, Goshen, Brooke Nichole, Feb. 28.

Notes

David Acosta started a management consulting business, the Base Corporation, in Lancaster, Pa.

Rod Amstutz writes: "After a very interesting two months selling cars in Denver (Colo.), I traveled for five weeks alone in central Europe, looking for work and staying almost exclusively in private homes. I almost had a restaurant job on top of an Austrian Alp, but ended up working on a Mennonite farm near Kaiserslautern in southwest Germany. And my goal, in staying, is simply to learn more."

Laura Eitzen is graphic designer at the firm of Anspach, Grossman, Portugal in New York City.

Phil Leichty, Albany, Ore., is a substitute teacher and coaches varsity volleyball and tennis.

Gina Mellinger-Alicea, DeKalb, Ill., is studying at Northern Illinois University for an M.F.A. degree. Hector Alicea '85 is working as a job placement and training specialist for the Illinois Migrants Council.

Barry Stoltzfus, Telford, Pa., was promoted to assistant trust officer at Union National Bank in Souderton. Ingrid Bixler Stoltzfus is an R.N. on the psychiatric floor at Grandview Hospital in Sellersville. They write: "We're both grateful for the preparation GC provided us in adjusting to the career world."

H. Harold Hartzler (faculty '37-57), Glendale, Ariz., authored a major genealogical work on the family of Samuel Koenig (King), who immigrated to Pennsylvania in 1744. He spent 40 years on the book, which includes 14,000 families, 70,000 names and two indexes.

Dressing the family tree:

Genealogical roots in the MHL

By Judith Davis

Was your mother a Miller from Holmes County? If you hanker to know where her family lived before they settled in Ohio, or to write a family history, you should plan to consult administrative assistant Lena Lehman or other staff members of the MHL. They can show you how to make the best use of the nearly 2,700 general-subject volumes in the MHL genealogical collection.

If you write or telephone the library for information, chances are that Lehman will do the research and Ina Ruth Breckbill will send you a letter of reply. If you visit the library, one of the staff may guide you to special books and genealogical aids — one of the 75 Miller family books, for instance, or a manuscript of the Miller-Riehl Family Record.

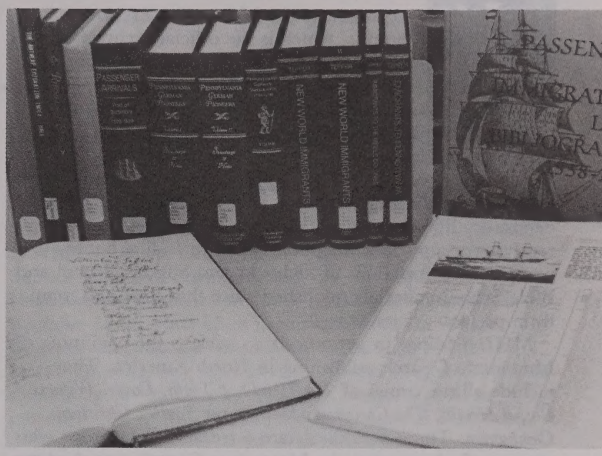
The MHL collection is especially strong in the genealogy of Amish and Mennonite families coming from Switzerland, South Germany and Alsace. Many Dutch, West Prussian, and Russian families are represented as well.

Several specialized indexes aid the genealogical researcher. For example, Freda Redekop and others prepared and indexed for computer printout approximately 120 Amish genealogies for a genetic study done by The Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine. The library has maintained an obituary index to the Herald of Truth and Gospel Herald from 1864 to the present. Nearly 50 years ago (1937-38) Curator Emeritus Nelson Springer, then a GC freshman, typed cards for this index. Currently Lorraine Roth volunteers her labor to maintain it.

Other resources for the family historian include records from the Pennsylvania colonial courts (138 volumes of government proceedings, church records, land purchases, military rolls, and estate inventories). Maps, atlases, census records, abstracts of wills, cemetery records, immigrant and emigrant lists, ship lists, city directories and histories, county histories and genealogical periodicals help fill out the collection.

"The collection is the best of its kind in the Western hemisphere. It rivals collections in Europe, none of which display the global range of the Goshen collection, which is also rich in American Mennonitica.

—Professor George H. Williams
The Divinity School, Harvard University



The MHL's passenger lists are an excellent resource for genealogists.

Unique items in the genealogical field include a book on the Sprunger family that cites details of family baptisms as long ago as the 16th century. An Egli-Roth family book contains extensive charts, prepared in Europe for the American compiler. Another collection of notes on Mennonite families, taken from the Bern archives and compiled by Isaac Zürcher, lists 16th- to 18th-century families and gives something of their background. Still another volume was assembled by Dr. Karl Joder, who searched for all the Yoders he could find in Europe, photocopying documents and information about that family.

Although Lehman and Breckbill handle some requests for information by mail, they suggest that researchers visit the library whenever possible. Special carrels provide pleasant work areas where researchers may use typewriters if they wish; microfilm readers are also available, as is a coin-operated copying machine.

Not every researcher will be able to replicate the Steiner family record of more than 1,600 names on leaves, branches, twigs and burls of a 25-square-inch tree. Once the seeds of research are planted, however, it's surprising how rapidly the sapling develops into an impressive family tree.

Judith Davis is director of sponsored programs at Goshen College.

The MHL and the Church

By John D. Yoder

In contrast to the Mennonite Archives on campus, which is the official archives of the church, the Mennonite Historical Library and the Mennonite Church have never drawn up a legal document to formalize their relationship. It's as if the church and the MHL have been engaged for many years but never made it to the altar.

Formalized or not, the MHL performs many semi-official functions for the church. Since 1951 the MHL has been the depository library of the Mennonite Publishing House, receiving a copy of all its publications including books, pamphlets, translations of its books and Sunday School and Bible School materials published since that time and many from previous years as well.

MHL holdings in periodicals go back to the beginning of Mennonite Church publishing in North America. They include all the copies of The Herald of Truth, Gospel Witness, Gospel Herald, The Christian Monitor and Youth's Christian Companion. These periodicals are a treasure for anyone who wants to find out what the Mennonite Church was thinking over the past 100 years about dress codes, the Civil War, revivalism, worldliness, Sunday schools or hundreds of other topics that have inspired theological debates across the church from time to time.

The MHL was a particularly important resource for The Mennonite Encyclopedia. Pastors, scholars and students around the world use The Mennonite Encyclopedia as a resource for concise information about Mennonites. Published in 1955, the Encyclopedia attempted "'an exhaustive coverage in all fields of Anabaptist-Mennonite history, theology, ethics, and life . . . .'" According to the introduction, the editors made a serious attempt to include "'articles on all known existing and extinct congregations, institutions, ecclesiastical organizations, and church publications, in all countries in all branches of Anabaptists and Mennonites.'"

A project of this scope was inconceivable without the MHL, said John S. Oyer, director of the MHL. When articles came in from writers around the world, "'Harold and Elizabeth Bender and Melvin Gingerich checked their accuracy using the resources of the MHL.'"

Among the special resources they used were the hundreds of congregational histories on file in the MHL. These histories continue to serve as models for historians writing about their local churches.

Now a fifth volume of the encyclopedia is being planned to revise major articles and to cover topics not mentioned in the first edition. The MHL will again be a resource.

Nelson Springer used the holdings of the MHL as the core of his definitive Mennonite Bibliography. Springer attempted to include everything written by and about the Mennonites, Amish and Hutterites from 1631 to 1961, excluding works in the natural sciences because "'it was too difficult to identify Mennonite authors in those fields,'" he said.

Through this two-volumn, 1,165 page work (220 pages are index) with 28,165 references, Mennonites from all over the world "'have ready access to material on topics of Mennonite doctrine and history,'" Springer said.

The Mennonite Quarterly Review (MQR), the foremost scholarly journal devoted to Mennonites, "'is absolutely dependent on the MHL,'" according to editor John Oyer. Like the editors of The Mennonite Encyclopedia, Oyer uses the MHL to check the accuracy of footnotes and quotations in articles submitted to the journal.

Begun in 1927, the Review publishes articles on all aspects of Mennonite life and thought, not just Mennonite history. Recent issues, for example, have included a literary analysis of the novels of Rudy Wiebe; a special issue on Anabaptism, oppression and liberation in Central America; a sociological study on trends in Mennonite intermarriage; an article on mission interest among French Mennonites; and an article that grew out of a doctoral dissertation on the monastic origins of Swiss Anabaptist sectarianism.

Articles analyzing such a rich cross-section of Mennonite life are found to the same degree in no other Mennonite journal, and that scope is one reason the MQR is found in more libraries throughout the world than any other Mennonite-related periodical.

Oyer also sees a mission for the the Review beyond the Mennonite Church. "'At present there are more Baptist than Mennonite pastors who subscribe to the MQR, Oyer said. "'They are interested in the free-church option. It's shaping their congregations, and they've decided that what they really should look at are free-church ways of thinking about theological issues.'"

Despite there being no official administrative link between the MHL and the Mennonite Church, the MHL's service to the church in scholarly journals like the Mennonite Quarterly Review and research has been a fertile friendship that continues to bring fresh ideas into church life by interpreting Mennonite experience in the past for a new generation.

"'At its best the MHL ought to demonstrate what the Mennonite-Anabaptist way to be Christian is,'" Oyer said.

The diligent search for books and periodicals finding books for the Mennonite Historical Library is one of our most interesting tasks. We want to acquire books and articles by and about all Mennonites, Amish, Hutterian Brethren and Anabaptists.

By John S. Oyer

We order 90 percent of the books directly from publishers. Our staff spends many hours culling citations of books for possible purchase from perhaps 90 Mennonite and Amish newspapers and periodicals, including many from foreign countries, as well as citations from perhaps 40 additional scholarly journals. Many friends around the world send us citations of books, or even the books themselves — gracious acts because many come from areas of the world where we have few contacts. Twice annually we sort the citations and decide which books to order.

A second major source of books is approximately 15 antiquarian booksellers of whom all but two are European, and most of those are Dutch. They offer books for direct sale or for auction, acquiring them from literary estates or from other collectors. We have been able to find some very rare books in this way.

In our ongoing search for rare books we need to shift our focus toward compiling lists of books we want and sending them to selected antiquarian booksellers who will search within the trade for us, all because we rarely find an important book listed for sale or auction that we do not already have.

The market for Mennonitica has become intensely competitive, which means that an increasing number of books fall outside our price range. Although we buy only 10 percent of our books through such houses, we spend approximately 60 percent of our book budget for them.

We purchase approximately 1,000 books annually. Only six or seven years ago we purchased only 400 per year, an indication of the explosion in publication of Mennonitica.

What would we like to find? Any imprint of Menno Simons published during his lifetime, but especially his Fundamentboek published in 1539; or Ein schon Geseanghicklein geistlicher Lieder, 1563-65, a hymnbook from the southern Germanic regions for which we have no copies of three known editions; any copy of five different editions of a basic hymnbook by the Dutch Anabaptist Hans de Ries; or polemics written by Dutch Mennonites against each other during the bitter strife of the 17th century.

It is more common to find polemics against the Anabaptists, written by Lutherans, Catholics or Reformed, than to find works for sale written by the Anabaptists themselves.

Students learn and work in MHL

By Mary Anstutz

oshen students work in the Mennonite Historical Library in two capacities: many do research for class assignments, while a few are student assistants performing a variety of library tasks.

Teachers assign papers that use the MHL because it is an excellent way for students to learn how to handle primary materials, the essence of good research. For example, computer systems major David Nugroho, a native of Indonesia, studied Mennonites in Indonesia, and Miriam Weaver, an English major, did a study of Anabaptism and hermeneutics using an Anabaptist concordance printed around 1540. Helen Gascho, a natural science major, investigated the Amish use of the ban, combining her research with interviews of local Amish.

The student assistants who work in the MHL are chosen as freshmen for their thoroughness and attention to detail, with the expectation that they will work in the MHL throughout their college years.

Attention to detail is especially important in their work. Students must type book labels and call numbers accurately, file cards in the proper order, and photocopy old books without damaging their brittle pages or bindings and carefully bind pamphlets and paperbacks.

At present the bulk of student work is spent entering our card catalog into an international library computer data base. Support for the project comes from a National Endowment for the Humanities grant. The catalogers code the bibliographic information in prescribed fields, each with its own punctuation conventions. Then the student assistants type these records into the computer.

Some students have assignments related to their own interests. Because of his interest in Mennonite history, John D. Roth had the task of deciding which books would be retired to less accessible shelves when MHL storage space expanded to the south wing of the Good Library. Roth now teaches history and religion at Goshen College.

Other outstanding students have been hired as regular staff members. When the NEH grant allowed for paraprofessional staffing, we hired two former student assistants, Karl Steiner and Mack Plank, for the positions. Another student, Jonathan Lorenc, who had cataloged collections in the Netherlands and Israel, was immediately put to work as a cataloger when he came to GC this fall.

Because of these capable persons, we have been able to exceed by approximately 60 percent our goal for the number of titles cataloged in the past grant year.

Mary Anstutz is associate librarian in the Mennonite Historical Library.

Grads hear Palmer

Educated people must think with their hearts as well as their minds if the world is to have a bright future, a sociologist-philosopher told the Goshen College Class of 1986 at the 88th annual commencment April 20.

Dr. Parker Palmer of the St. Benedict Center, Madison, Wis., said that "too many 'educated' people have forgotten how to feel," which aggravates the world's problems.

"For 200 years, the Western tradition of rationality has tried to divorce the mind from the heart. We have been too successful," Palmer said. Five years ago, the Carnegie Commission surveyed graduating college seniors and found that most had little hope for the future of the world, but were sure their own futures were bright. He called that an "irrational split."

"Take the gifts of rationality and put them in the heart," Palmer said. "The heart completes the mind. The mind wants objectivity, but the heart knows some things must be embraced."

Palmer lauded the Mennonite tradition as "a tradition that for hundreds of years has held together faith and learning in a way that our culture so desperately needs."

In the Sunday morning baccalaureate service, president Victor Stoltzfus told the graduates to avoid "the flight to the foreground," the tendency to be so wrapped up in daily living that a person forgets his or her heritage.

"All of us need our past," Stoltzfus said. "The flattering myth of self-sufficiency lasts only as long as your problems are smaller than you are." He urged students to draw on their faith history, family history and family ties for strength to weather the world's trials.

In a change initiated by senior-class officers, almost all the 249 graduates wore traditional graduation gowns. Forty-five graduates received B.S. degrees in nursing and 204 received B.A. degrees. Heavy rain forced cancellation of the traditional march from the Church-Chapel to the Union.

Student wins NSF grant

Steve J. Zimmerly, a senior chemistry major, has been awarded a National Science Foundation Graduate Fellowship. Zimmerly, from Jackson, Ohio, will receive graduate-school tuition and fees and an annual $11,100 stipend for three years.

In the summer of 1985, he participated in a 10-week program at the UCLA Laboratory of Biomedical and Environmental Sciences in which undergraduates did research projects. Zimmerly's project involved the genetics of Tetrahymena, a protozoan.

Zimmerly plans to study biochemistry at Yale University.

Sports roundup

Spring sports at Goshen College are now running in full force. This year's season includes men's baseball and golf and men's and women's track.

The baseball team, coached by Harold Yoder, enjoyed some early victories in doubleheader action against Great Lakes Bible College and Tri-State University. Other highlights were three wins over Bethel College, Mishawaka, Ind., currently ranked 15th in the latest NAIA poll. In the first game freshman Phil Kym pitched a four-hit shut-out to give the Leafs a 5-0 victory.

Although Yoder cited lack of pitching depth and tight scheduling as weaknesses for the team, the coach commended his players for "their hustle and attitude." The baseball team's current record is 12-7.

Men's golf is fortunate to have two returning players — sophomores Scott Kaufmann and Matt Steiner — who were the team's top performers last year. The team recently returned from a tour of southern states that took them to five different courses. "As we played each day, our scores got better," coach John Ingold said. "By the end of the trip, Kaufmann and Steiner both broke 80, and we really began to feel team spirit."

While Ingold believes this team will top last year's school record, he noted that the six golfers must work hard to climb up from fourth position in MCC play this season.

"We're probably considered the last-place team, which I can understand," Ingold said. "But we've made good progress in practices. We may surprise some people."

The men's track team is finding its strength this year in long-distance events, according to coach Ed Gore. Senior Joachim Oberst and junior Fred Kem — both marathoners — promise to give the team some added energy.

Overall, Gore finds the 14-man team few in number but motivated.

"These guys are out here because they want to be. They go through the agony because they want to. The inner drive of the athletes is one thing that is rewarding and enjoyable about coaching track," he said.

Women's track is emphasizing individual achievement this year because the team has only six members, coach Sue Roth said. Senior Jennifer Helmuth is unique because she is participating for the fourth year. She is strong in the javelin, discus and shot put events. Four team members have set school records: freshman Aletha Stahl in long-distance running and sophomores Becky Yoder in the high jump, Mary Kurtz in the discus and Gretchen Yoder in the triple jump.

Summer Art Gallery Exhibit

"Artful Writing," the summer exhibit in the Goshen College Art Gallery, will be shown May 4-Aug. 2. Curated by Rebecca Haarer '75, the exhibit features pieces of historic and contemporary Mennonite and Amish folk art in which writing is an important part of the design, such as Fraktur, glass paintings and friendship quilts. The exhibit is co-sponsored by the art department, the Mennonite Historical Library, the Indiana Arts Commission and the Mennonite Museum Committee.

Music, computer weeks open

Applications are still being taken for High School Music Week, Computer Seminar and the Workshop for Piano Teachers and Students, June 15-20.

Music Week will bring high school students together for six days of classes, rehearsals and performances under Goshen College professors. The program is open to high school vocalists and instrumentalists.

Piano Week, June 16-20, will bring teachers and students of junior high age or older together with professionals like Lawrence Rast and organist Wolfgang Rübsam. The Goshen College piano faculty will also give lectures and master classes.

Students in Computer Seminar will be divided into BASIC, Pascal and Advanced Pascal classes according to their experience.

Faculty

Hispanic Ministries faculty busy

José M. Ortiz, chair of the Hispanic Ministries department, will spend five weeks in Central America May 17-June 21 teaching seminars for Anabaptist-oriented church leaders under the aegis of SEMILLA. SEMILLA, the Spanish word for "seed," is a decentralized study program in which three or four intensive seminars are given annually in four to six countries.

The unified leadership training effort is sponsored by 10 Mennonite and Brethren in Christ national church organizations in Central America.

Ortiz will travel to Mexico, Honduras, Guatemala, Nicaragua and Costa Rica to give the seminars in church administration and decision-making to pastors and lay leaders. Ron Collins, associate professor of Hispanic ministries, taught Biblical interpretation in the program in 1985.

The Hispanic Mennonite Church in North America, 1932-1982, the English translation of the history written by Rafael Falcón, associate professor of Spanish, has been published by Herald Press. Ron Collins translated the book, which was published in Spanish in fall, 1985. Collins will teach in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, from June to November for the Mennonite Board of Missions.

Beck studies folk art

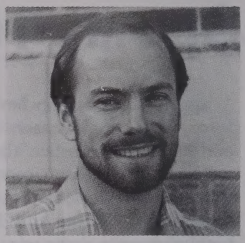
The first study ever done of an American folk art will be carried out this summer by a Goshen College professor.

Ervin Beck, professor of English and a folklorist, will study glass painting among the Amish and Mennonites in Northern Indiana. Family records, Bible verses and mottoes painted on glass are used as decorative objects in the home.

The folklorist is particularly interested in whether one technique, reverse glasspainting, has been maintained as a tradition constantly since it first appeared in the 18th century among Anabaptists in Europe, or if the tradition was revived after Amish and Mennonites came to North America, he said. One of his theories is that crafts classes taught in primary schools during the 20th century may have led to its revival.

Beck plans to conduct his research mainly through interviewing folk artists to find out how they choose and execute designs. He also would like to investigate the relationship between earlier use of Fraktur, decorative writing on paper, and glass painting.

The Indiana Committee for the Humanities has awarded Beck a two-month Summer Humanities Fellowship to carry out the research.



First Merry Lea teaching fellow named

Anthony G. Fraundorf, 26, has been appointed as the first Dr. Alton Lindsey teaching fellow for the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center of Goshen College, Wolf Lake, Ind. Formerly a naturalist for the Elkhart County Department of Parks and Recreation, Fraundorf is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin at Stevens Point, where he majored in natural resource management and biology with an emphasis on environmental education.

He will live at Merry Lea and will be responsible for environmental science instruction for visiting classes, site planning, developing public programming and communications.

The Lindsey teaching fellowship honors Dr. Alton Lindsey, ecologist and professor emeritus at Purdue University, who has been a consultant for Merry Lea since its inception.

Preheim, alumni sing in Europe

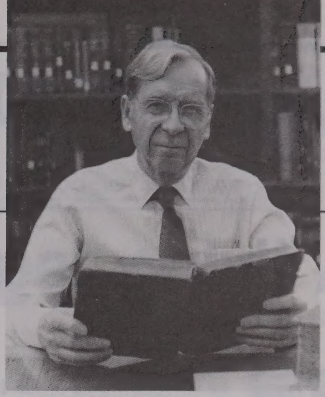
Thirteen alumni and two GC students will tour Europe in July with Doyle Preheim, professor of music, and the Choral Society of Southern California. Preheim will direct the Choral Society in some of its rehearsals for performances in London, England, and Nuremburg, Germany.

The Choral Society will perform Hayden's "Lord Nelson Mass" in London with the Philharmonia Orchestra July 18, and Dvorak's oratorio "Saint Ludmila" in Nuremburg with the Nuremburg Symphony July 26-27.

At the end of the Choral Society tour, Preheim and his group will tour Mennonite communities in southern Germany for six days presenting a musical program.

Correction

The Bulletin was gently reminded that a former Goshen College faculty member also received a Fulbright grant while on the GC faculty. Howard H. Charles, professor of New Testament at the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries, received a Fulbright grant to study at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, from 1950 to 1952.



Nelson Springer: A passion for accuracy

By Tim Jantz and Lois Landis Kurowski

Ask a teacher about her students, and she can tell you which ones have promise, which ones don't, which ones are bullies and which ones stick up for the underdog. Nelson Springer is a lot like that when he talks about materials in the Mennonite Historical Library.

The MHL, he says, has some "exceedingly valuable books" and "others that should never have been written, really poorly written materials." Moments later, his face twists in visible discomfort when he talks about how "difficult" it is for him when "I see how fragile some of the books are, especially some 19th- and the 20th-century books and periodicals."

More than anyone else, Springer knows the MHL and has lived with it for four decades. His labors have made its treasures of information and knowledge accessible to the public.

Springer has had a passion for books "for almost as long as I can remember," he admits, and had interest in being a librarian when he was in the fifth grade. As a Goshen College student, he started working part-time in the ironing room, but soon moved to a job in the library, working with librarian Stella Binkele.

"I liked the good professional job and good organization that she used in her work," he recalled. "She inspired me to continue library work in the way it should be done."

However, after graduating in 1941, Springer worked for six years managing the GC bookstore and the snack shop.

"Goshen College is the custodian of 'national' as well as denominational treasures."

—Professor George H. Williams
The Divinity School, Harvard University

When the job became a 14-hours-per day, six-days-per-week "exhausting" job in the sixth year, Springer "really wanted to get back into library work." He took a job with the Mennonite Archives and the newly formed Mennonite Research Foundation and also studied at the seminary.

Springer kept reminding seminary dean Harold S. Bender that he wanted to work in the MHL. Eventually, an arrangement was set up in which Springer worked half time in the MHL and half time in the Mennonite Archives. He took a year off to study for a master's degree in library science at the University of Illinois, completing it in 1953.

Finally, in 1953, Springer was able to start working full time for the MHL, which he did for 34 years. Since 1984, he has worked four-fifths time.

Springer has brought to his 45 years of work at Goshen College a unique gift, an almost unmatched passion for accuracy. "A lot of persons are not as precise as I am because some can't cope with the boredom of making something painstakingly accurate," he said. "As a good librarian, you have to be prepared to deal with that sort of thing."

His masterwork, a two-volume Mennonite Bibliography, grew out of that passion for accuracy. Seminary student A. J. Klassen began it in 1960 at the request of the Institute for Mennonite Studies, but could not complete it because of other responsibilities. Springer thought too much time and money had been spent on it for it to be dropped.

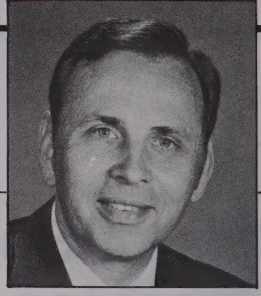
In a tribute, John S. Oyer, MHL director, noted that Springer "individually checked and proofread" each of the 28,165 entries. For the books listed in the bibliography, "probably 75 percent of the entries originated with Nelson, and another 24 percent were revised drastically by him."

For Nelson Springer, however, the satisfaction derived from his work has not come mainly from working with books, but from working with people. Some of his favorite memories include introducing elementary-school students to the MHL, working with 80-year-old amateur genealogists and helping eminent scholars explore the library's treasures.

The vision that has guided him through the tedious hours of painstaking work was not merely of conquering his cataloging backlog, but of helping Anabaptists discover the richness of their heritage.

"It's been very rewarding to me to see how many of our college students have become excited about the Mennonite Church because of research they did in the MHL," Springer said.

Sum and substance



A living legacy

By Victor Stoltzfus

The reception area of the Mennonite Historical Library (MHL) has a bust of Harold S. Bender (1897-1962), former dean of Goshen College Biblical Seminary. It helps me recall the editorial work that he and his wife Elizabeth were doing on the Mennonite Encyclopedia during my student days in the 1950s.

For 35 years he had been collecting materials for the MHL in Europe and America. The MHL was their work area for those years of writing, translating and editing.

Their work spanned a time when it was tempting for Mennonites to adopt the fundamentalist-modernist struggle as our own. Harold Bender diverted the energy of the more thoughtful leaders of his time to the much richer vein of meaning in our own history and theology.

I find it fascinating that he didn't even include an article on fundamentalism in the Mennonite Encyclopedia. The article on liberalism was limited to the Dutch Mennonites. Had some scholar not ministered to the Mennonite Church in this way, it is likely that another split in the church would have occurred, and Goshen College would have ended up representing the "victorious" faction, severed from the genius of our own history.

The MHL, through the work of Harold and Elizabeth Bender, served as a unifying influence, preserving and interpreting a shared past for Mennonites and all interested in our story. It continues that function today. As curator emeritus Nelson Springer expressed it recently, the Mennonite Historical Library is not a collection of old, dull books, but a living collection.

Temple University historian Franklin Littell echoes that thought. "While much of the teaching of the . . . theologians of the 16th century is today unreal and irrelevant, what the Anabaptists taught about mutual aid, peace, discipline, religious liberty, lay witness, etc. is as fresh and important as it was 15 generations ago."

Because Anabaptist-Mennonite materials point beyond themselves to the importance of Scripture and the Lordship of Christ, our historical materials have avoided the fate of being merely documents in a glass case over which visitors come and smile. In a recent year as much as 10 percent of the Goshen College student body used the MHL. An Illinois family who visted the MHL wrote a thank-you letter: "Our children have asked questions and expressed interest in church history because of that tour." Roman Catholic, Protestant and secular visitors come to the MHL because they are interested in exploring issues that are new for them, though historical and current for Mennonites.

Richard Schickel has written on what happens when a community loses its memory (Intimate Strangers, The Culture of Celebrity). "The media, more and more, are our community. No other in which we take part imparts the same feeling that we are connected with large, significant, exciting events, that we are on intimate terms with people who do big things, are in themselves amusing, entertaining, glamorous."

Leaders among Mennonites and other communions are understandably worried about the threat to community in our powerful media culture: Hollywood, record companies, CBS, NBC, ABC and youth magazines assault teenagers. To them old theological debates are irrelevant.

Only with a clear sense of identity can we avoid historical amnesia or talk meaningfully with moderns who are immersed in the ephemeral. Historical materials give us the wisdom and counsel of the ages. They are our escape from the tyranny of the present.

In addition to helping scholars with research, the staff of the Mennonite Historical Library make historical and spiritual connections with the various groups and scholars who visit. These visitors range in erudition from European and American scholars to Amish school children.

Most visitors come to look at materials in the two main languages of the collection, English and German, but there are also materials in Dutch, Spanish, Latin, French, Italian, Polish, Swedish, Romanian, Czech, Russian, Chinese, Japanese, Indonesian, Indian languages, African dialects and others. Research papers from students in the Hispanic Ministries program are an especially valued addition from our own campus.

The students and faculty of the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in Elkhart are other users of the library.

Both the seminary and the college support the library from our annual operating budgets. Goshen College has promised to solicit endowment funds for the MHL and it is a high priority in current college fundraising. The National Endowment for the Humanities has invested over $290,000 in cataloging our collection for greater access for all.

The MHL was an important source of Harold Bender's religious vision. Although he was a historian at a small college serving a small denomination, there was nothing narrow about his faith. In his last public words, a prayer at Mennonite World Conference in 1962 at Kitchener, Ontario, he said: "Our hearts rise up to rejoice at all the possibilities that lie before us in this world because Thou art the Lord of all. Increase our love for the (sisters and brothers). And as the coming years give us opportunity, help us to help one another in all the good ministries of the Gospel . . . from the oldest of our churches in Europe . . . to the newest of our churches in the far-flung corners of the earth . . . ." Amen.

Challenging RAMBO

Starving our macho instincts

By John R. Burkholder

Last December, two magazines arrived on the same day. The two bright covers grabbed my attention: they had similar color schemes of bold red, white and black and some of the same words, but what a contrast in concepts and meanings!

The January issue of Sojourners portrayed a black child holding a poster of Martin Luther King Jr., with the banner "Getting Ready for the Hero," while on the cover of Newsweek for Dec. 23, 1985, there was a battered boxer in the corner of the ring, wrapped in an American flag, with the caption "Showing the Flag: Rocky, Rambo and the Return of the American Hero."

These two opposing images of the hero in contemporary culture raise disturbing questions. Which one really is the American hero? What do these two very different stories have to tell us?

Newsweek's cover story looks at the societal impact of Sylvester Stallone's two movie personae, Rocky and Rambo, the box office hits that have "brought the hero back to the forefront of American mythology."

Of course, we consumers of American culture know all about them. John J. Rambo is an outlaw Green Beret killer who runs up a battalion-size body count in his one-man crusade for revenge of U.S. losses in Vietnam, and Rocky Balboa is the never-say-die palooka from Philadelphia. In this fourth of the Rocky series, the climax features a brutal battle with the Russian bionic giant — the ultimate cold warriors slugging it out in Moscow on Christmas Day.

No matter that the reviewers have called Stallone's films "empty, crude, primitive, boring, bloated, hollow, mush-headed, butter-brained"; that doesn't bother the multitudes, as the movies drew crowds in record numbers.

According to Newsweek, many Americans are hungry for a cathartic release from perceived blows to national pride; they are mad and don't want to take it anymore. So the country rallies around the screen portrayals of brutality and violent victory.

Over against Rocky and Rambo, black historian Vincent Harding, in his Sojourners essay, reflects on the meaning of Jan. 20, 1986, the time when the American nation formally added Martin Luther King Jr. to the pantheon of official heroes. Harding asks if the nation is ready for such a hero, one who combined the gifts of pastor, prophet and political leader, one who exposed America's hypocrisy and challenged its pieties, one who was hounded and harassed and jailed time and again, who now after death by assassination is honored by those who hated him when he was alive. Can Americans really accept a hero who embodies nonviolence, suffering and the way of the cross?

Thus the two stories complement each other and suggest some rather troubling aspects of current American culture. The contrasting magazine covers force us to ask, "Who are our heroes after all?" What kinds of role models embody our values and beliefs?

Today the so-called "macho values" seem to predominate: never admit weakness, never back down, never forgive or show tenderness. Always threaten and bluster and make sure that you have the advantage on the other guy. President Reagan's mid-April bombing of Libya demonstrates the macho model, and was loudly supported by middle America, the folks who love Rambo.

But is the world any safer after having "put Gadhafi back in his box," to quote Secretary of State George Schultz? It doesn't seem so; expensive security measures have been ordered at American embassies around the world, thousands of tourists are canceling travel plans, Americans living abroad have been threatened and church workers in the Middle East have had to abandon their service projects.

What then was the real accomplishment of the bombing mission against Libya? George McGovern in a recent newspaper column suggested that "attacking Libya from the air provided some sense of revenge for frustrated and angry Americans, feeding a . . . macho instinct found to some extent in all of us."

Doesn't it seem obvious that macho behavior really limits and even denies genuine human freedom? The knee-jerk violent reactions only escalate the violence. As Joan Baez told a gathering in Dallas a few days after the Libyan bombing: "An eye for an eye for an eye makes the whole world blind."

Maybe there's another way to work at the issue of heroism. If the compulsive masculinity of the Rambo style has reached a dead end, perhaps we can look for some other models.

Last fall, in the midst of the Geneva summit, Donald Regan, President Reagan's chief of staff, got annoyed by criticism of American nuclear policy from a Colorado congresswoman. He stated that women don't know anything about nuclear weapons and in fact aren't even interested in them.

Sister Joan Chittister of the Benedictine Sisters responded vigorously:

"That is the mentality that enables half the people of the world to make life-and-death decisions for the other half. Men know what's good for women. Women aren't smart enough to play in the big game. Women need to be protected by men."

She went on to note that Regan's attempt at correction, after huge public outcry, was even worse.

"Women, he said, were only interested in 'the human interest stuff.' Exactly. That's precisely the point," Chittister said. "In fact, it may be time to ask . . . whether men are the ones who don't understand nuclear weapons or human interest stuff, and that may be the reason why we have them. Because men cannot understand 'human interest stuff' enough to feel what nuclear warfare means, they go on producing nuclear weapons like little boys with snowballs" (National Catholic Reporter, Dec. 20, 1985, p. 17).

Perhaps it is time to listen to feminine voices on values and virtue. A few years ago, psychologist Carol Gilligan challenged the conventional wisdom on moral development (that is, Piaget, Erikson and Kohlberg) to argue that women typically use a different moral calculus than men do. Her book, In a Different Voice, offers an alternative view of Lawrence Kohlberg's well-known stages of moral development.

Kohlberg's hypothetical moral dilemmas had originally been developed in work with male subjects. But Gilligan, in her extensive analysis of women's interview responses, discovered that a different pattern of moral reasoning emerged.

To illustrate, perhaps the best known of Kohlberg's dilemmas is the story of Heinz, who is faced with the problem of whether or not to break into a drug store and steal a drug that he cannot afford to buy, in order to save the life of his wife. Even among the youngest respondents, Gilligan found that females structured their responses differently from males. For example, an 11-year-old boy applied a moral rule: life is worth more than property. But the girl subject Amy was not satisfied just to work with rules; she thought about the long-term implications of the act:

"If he stole the drug, he might save his wife then, but if he did, he might have to go to jail, and then his wife might get sicker again, and he couldn't get more of the drug, and it might not be good. So, they should really just talk it out and find some other way to make the money."

Amy wanted to find a way for everyone, including the druggist, to work things out so no one could get hurt; she refused to be confined to the limits of the given dilemma. The boys was concerned about systems of logic and law and principle; the girl looked at human beings, their communication and relationships and long term interests.

These cases provide the raw material for Gilligan's conception of female moral reasoning:

"In this [female] conception, the moral problem arises from conflicting responsibilities rather than from competing rights . . . [it is] concerned with the activity of care, centering moral development around the understanding of responsibility and relationships, just as the conception of morality as fairness ties moral development to the understanding of rights and rules" (Gilligan, p. 20; emphasis added).

In the popular culture, the opposite of the hero is the wimp. Typically, those who turn the other cheek, who seek alternatives to violence, are considered weak and wimpish. And of course, nobody wants to be a wimp.

But was Martin Luther King Jr. a wimp? Surely it takes more courage to absorb the blows, to refuse to strike back, to return good for evil.

Sam Collins of the Church of God Peace Fellowship writes:

"I have never understood why war is seen by so many as an act of strength. . . . War is always a failure, a visible weakness. It is clear evidence of the infantile emotional state of the nations involved. When we have matured sufficiently as a people, we will begin to see combat for the wimpish response that it is. True strength is displayed by those who can hold their tempers and thereby resist the urge to destructively aggress."

Conventional history offers plenty of examples of eye-for-eye "heroism," but look where it's taken us. Isn't it time to set forth alternative models of caring, compassion, and creativity, a new kind of hero for our children and for our world?

Rambo's challenge

Life-supporting heroes for children

By Kathryn Aschliman

Five-year-old Devin Kaplan was one of 75 youngsters chosen to test new toys at the 1986 American International Toy Fair. Holding a plastic Rambo Uzi water pistol in his right hand and a Rambo M-16 water gun in his left, Devin sidled up to a man dressed in a Santa costume. "Watch it," he warned, "here comes Rambo Junior." When asked what he liked about Rambo, Devin replied, "I like all the violence."

Coleco Industries' Rambo doll generated much interest among the 15,000 buyers attending the toy fair. Why? Because Rambo, modeled after the Sylvester Stallone character in the R-rated movie "Rambo: First Blood Part II," is the lead character in a syndicated TV cartoon aired this spring. Toy manufacturers have discovered that they can sell more dolls if those dolls are linked to a character in a cartoon show. In effect, the shows become a program-length commercial for the toy.

The Rambo cartoon joins similar prime-time offerings for children such as those based on Hasbro-Bradley's Transformers and GI Joe, Tonka Toys' Go-Bots and Mattel's He-Man ("the most powerful man in the universe") series that includes She-Ra, Moss Man ("heroic monster of camouflage"), Sy-Klone ("heroic fist-flinging tornado"), Buzz-Off ("heroic spy in the sky") and more.

These programs, most educators agree, prompt children to use their toys to resolve conflict through violence. The more than 850 scientific studies covering 120,000 people of all ages compiled by the National Coalition on Television Violence (NCTV) reveal that "violent entertainment plays an important and major role in teaching a culture of violence and distrust to (TV and movie) viewers of all age levels, social classes, ethnic backgrounds and intelligence levels." Research shows the most common effects of such exposure to be major increases in anger and irritability, loss of temper, increased verbal aggression, fear and anxiety and a desensitization toward violence. Decreases in sharing and cooperating are found repeatedly while increases in fighting, distrust and dishonesty occur.

In light of these studies, adults should help children evaluate cultural messages from a Christian perspective. Watching television together, examining different viewpoints, imagining the pain and grief of the family of the victims and discussing alternative approaches to violence are good beginnings. We can seek out television dramas that put us in touch with human suffering and joy that can help resensitize all of us. Developing a family television viewing policy may in itself be an exercise in conflict resolution.

Introducing children to heroes and heroines with Christian virtues can be a daily occurrence. Adults can help children write thank you letters to those who have done special favors. Resource speakers, including missionaries and church or service workers who describe their careers, may aid children in their vocational choices, and having international visitors in the home or classroom can help children develop an appreciation of other cultures. At family gatherings and reunions children develop a dimension of continuity as they tap the vast reservoir of love and wisdom found in older people.

In addition, selections in the field of children's literature often portray compassionate yet courageous people.

Traditional holidays and new holidays are occasions to highlight heroes and heroines of the present and the past. Halloween is a perfect time to feature a saint rather than engage in occult-related activities. One family took homemade elderberry jelly or candles when they went Christmas caroling at the homes of the children's principal, school and Sunday school teachers. Consider celebrating the birthdays of Mother Teresa (Aug. 27) or Jane Addams (Sept. 6) or World Community Day (Nov. 7). Include cooperative games that foster the building of relationships. Heroic ways of celebrating will make people happy, while not hurting another person or group of people or the earth.

Cultivating a sensitivity to life — to human needs and human concerns — encourages empathetic behaviors. If one values life, then one works for life.

The type of action one might take depends on the developmental level of the child. There is a fine line between our implanting fear in children, giving them false hope and creating courage to respond. By responding to world hunger, befriending refugees, the disabled and those who suffer ethnic, racial and sexual discrimination, children are involved in life-renewing activities.

Children should be surrounded by heroes and heroines who overcome evil with good. As adults model this way of life, introduce children to peacemakers and give children responsibility for helping others in age-appropriate ways, Rambo will have met his challenge.

Heroism and humility

By Shirley H. Showalter

How times have changed.

The 1960s film The Graduate contains a scene where young Dustin Hoffman is surrounded by middle-aged executives at a cocktail party. Hoffman's face barely masks his disgust for these fat people and their fatuous values as one man urges him to go into plastics, the wave of the future. At the end of the movie Hoffman vaults out of a church, rejecting the materialism and false security of that time and society. The audience of the '60s cheered wildly.

If Hollywood did a remake of The Graduate today, a Lee Iacocca look-alike would tower over a group of newly-minted MBAs. One would cup her hands to receive the ashes of his cigar, one hold the tray for his drink and all of them would wear the strained look of having listened to E. F. Hutton too long. When Michael J. Fox finally got his job in plastics, the audience would explode in approval.

Popular culture has moved from admiring the anti-hero Hoffman represented to the adulation of heroes like Iacocca (his biography was number one in college bookstores for months). We professors are challenged to adapt to changing students in our classes. The Doonesbury cartoon strip has made much of this dilemma. One cartoon featured a chaplain talking on the phone with one of his former radical students. "I gotta level with you, Mike, it's very disheartening," says the chaplain. "The campus today seems to be filled with either budding nihilists like your brother or little droids who just want to be fed the answers. My pews used to be filled with kids like you who asked questions, who grappled with their faith, who led examined lives!"

Former student Mike's response is, "Uh-huh. Look, Rev, I'm sorry, but the car pool's waiting."

Neither the chaplain's current disillusionment nor Dustin Hoffman's '60s escapism provides an adequate model for how to deal with a need for the heroic in the '80s. We need instead a theology of heroism. Our heritage of Anabaptism and Christian humanism can help us navigate through one of the most difficult passages in the contemporary church — the Scylla of success and the Charybdis of humility.

Those of us who grew up Mennonite have vivid images of humility. One Sunday our minister confessed to the sin of pride. He admitted that he was proud to own the oldest car in the parking lot! Though I chafed under the admonitions to be humble that I heard in church, I also appreciated them. I knew our church was unique in making humility a virtue. Ironically, like my minister, I was proud of that. Yet I yearned to hear about aspiration and achievement, too. I wanted to be humble but not ordinary.

How can we reconcile our desire for greatness with Christ's example of humility? Jesus answered James and John's request for power in His kingdom this way: "Whoever wants to be great must be a servant, and whoever wants to be first must be the willing slave of all."

Surely, this admonition is one of the hardest Jesus ever taught: to be heroic, we must be humble.

Others have discovered the same truth. Thomas Merton in New Seeds of Contemplation says that "humility meets the highest exaltation of greatness. It is here that [all who humble themselves are] exalted because, living no longer for [themselves] on the human level, the spirit is delivered of all the limitations and vicissitudes of creaturehood and of contingency, and swims in the attributes of God, Whose power, magnificence, greatness and eternity have, through love, through humility, become our own."

How do we become such people? For one thing, we choose the right heroes. We tune our senses to the God-like in others. We listen and look for qualities overlooked in the popular culture — the history-laden voice of Leontyne Price when she sings "Precious Lord, take my hand," the translucent face of Dom Helder Camara, the gentle strength of Dorothy Day's hands. We remember the Anabaptist martyrs and our own grandparents. We allow their example to soften and mold us.

The heroes that Hollywood offers us have come from Central Casting. Casting is a good term for them, because they are thin and hard — like cast metal. The heroes we at Goshen College offer our students must be stronger and more elastic. Their strength lies in stretching compassionately toward others.

At the base of our need for the heroic is a desire for God. This desire comprises the root of the pursuit of happiness. Hence, one of the greatest blessings on earth is the discovery of heroes — people who are artists of the spirit.

The famous violin teacher Shinichi Suzuki made a form of hero-worship a key part of his educational philosophy. He urged his student, Koji Toyoda, who later became first concert master of the Berlin Radio Symphony, to find both heroes and humility: "However wonderful the other person may be, it depends on us alone — whether we have the capacity to absorb their greatness. One has to educate oneself from within to benefit from the greatness of others. Only if one can do this can one fully realize the joy of being near someone who is great. Never lose your humility, for pride obscures the power to perceive truth and greatness."

I can think of no better advice for myself or my students.

Soccer league successful

Dwain Hartzler '71, GC director of student activities, thought there might be interest in a youth soccer league in Goshen. Together with Dan Bodiker '64 and Stefan Miller, he organized the Goshen Youth Soccer Organization for grades one to six. Expecting to field 10 or 12 teams the first year, 260 boys and girls signed up — enough for 20 teams. Hartzler quickly hustled more businesses as sponsors and recruited more coaches and referees.

The resulting league was an outstanding success. The coed teams played a seven game schedule in April and May with a tournament in June. Hartzler stressed learning basic soccer skills instead of winning. "We wanted kids to play so they would learn the fundamentals," he said. Parents and players liked the approach. "They want to see it continue," he said.

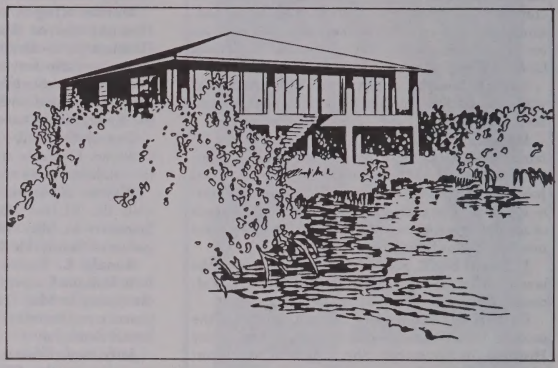
Marine biology lab dedicated

The new Goshen College Marine Biology Laboratory, Layton, Fla., was dedicated May 3 with ceremonies in the Layton Community Church.

President emeritus J. Lawrence Burkholder, professor emeritus of biology C. Franklin Bishop, professor Jonathan N. Roth and marine biology students participated, along with members of the Layton community and Paul Wenger, superintendent of Sarasota Christian School.

Construction of the $120,000 building was made possible by a major gift from Ina Latta Strasser. Designed by Weldon Pries, Boston, Mass., it faces Zane Grey Creek. The land was donated by Del Layton, mayor of Layton, and his wife Mary, Peter E. and Frances Riley and Harold and Betty Kravitz of Layton.

Other donors were the Home-Crest Corporation, Harold C. Good and the Smokercraft Corporation. Dwight Graber, a GC alumnus and a contractor in Duck Key, Fla., supervised the construction. Twenty-six volunteers from the Sarasota area donated a great deal of labor for the project. Gail Miller, director of business and development of Sarasota Christian School, coordinated the volunteers' efforts. The Sarasota school also will use the facility.



Men's teams finish strong

The men's athletic teams capped their seasons with strong finishes. Fred Kem and Joachim Oberst represented GC at the NAIA national track and field meet at Russelville, Ark. Oberst, a senior from Gernsbach, Germany, placed eighth in the marathon, running the hilly course in 2:42:07. Kem, a junior from Knox, Ind., placed ninth in a preliminary heat for the steeplechase with a time of 10:04.

The baseball team compiled its best record in years, 18-13. The team upset highly ranked Bethel College (Mishawaka, Ind.) 11-7 in the first round of the NAIA District 21 playoffs May 8, but fell to a team from Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis 5-3 in the second leg of the double-elimination tournament.

The golf team carried a less-than-shining 2-10 conference record into the NAIA District 21 tournament May 9-10, but surprised the field by placing fifth out of 11 teams to make the first-day cut. The team placed fourth of six teams the second day. Leading the team was Matt Steiner, a sophomore from West Liberty, Ohio, who shot 159 for the two rounds. Steiner was named to the Mid-Central Conference all-conference golf team, an honor given to only seven golfers in the conference.

Women win conference championship

The women's athletic teams got a surprise May 5 when they learned they had won the first Hoosier Conference for Women all-sports championship.

The women's teams won the trophy by one-half point over the teams from Manchester College, North Manchester, Ind.

Women's athletic director Ruth Gunden was particularly surprised. "At the beginning of the year, we didn't think we had a chance because we don't have a softball team," she said. The conference's members must field teams in at least four of the five conference sports, which are tennis, volleyball, basketball, track and softball.

The GC women took the trophy on the basis of winning the conference championship in volleyball, tying for the basketball championship and placing second in the conference in track and tennis. The field hockey team's outstanding season, which included a NAIA District 21 championship, did not count because field hockey is not a conference sport.

To celebrate, the athletes who were still on campus and the women's teams' coaches went out to dinner. The cost was paid by an anonymous donor.

Formed in 1985, the Hoosier Conference for Women includes Anderson, Earlham, Goshen, Hanover and Manchester colleges. All the members share the same athletic philosophy, including a policy of not giving athletic scholarships. Gunden is president of the conference.

The final achievement of the women's spring season was freshman Aletha Stahl's performance at the NAIA national track and field meet May 24 in Russelville, Ark. Stahl, from Harrisonburg, Va., placed seventh in the women's marathon with a time of 3:26:05.

Seven students receive fellowships

One recent GC graduate has received a graduate fellowship, and six GC undergraduates have received undergraduate fellowships.

Sally A. Hunsberger, a 1986 graduate majoring in mathematics and biology, received a graduate fellowship from Virginia Commonwealth University's Medical College of Virginia. She will begin study in the fall in a four-year doctoral program leading to a Ph.D. in biostatistics.

Two senior physics majors have been named Turner Laboratory Fellows. They are T. Douglas Mast, Lancaster, Pa., and Tom G. Miller, Berlin, Ohio. The fellowships include stipends for full-time research this summer in the Turner Precision X-Ray Laboratory and eight to 10 hours of work weekly during the 1986-87 school year.

The Lyall interns at the Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center had a busy month in May, where they gave trailside instruction for approximately 1,300 school children who visited. The interns, all senior education majors, were David Diller, Adrian, Mich.; Rhonda S. Rhodes, Middlebury, Ind.; Jane L. Stutzman, Holmesville, Ohio, and Elizabeth R. Yoder, Iowa City, Iowa.

Funded by the Lyall Electric Company, Kendallville, Ind., the internships include three weeks of field training in wildlife biology, glacial geology, wildflowers and pond ecology.

Nursing Division, Merry Lea receive grants

The GC Division of Nursing has received a $19,050 grant from the Helene Fuld Health Trust, Old Greenwich, Conn. The grant will be used to buy computer hardware and software and video equipment for the division's self-learning center.

The Merry Lea Environmental Learning Center received a $1,000 grant from the John Q. and Hester Adams Trust, Columbia City, Ind. The award will support educational programs for elementary and high-school students from Whitley County, Ind., who use the facility to study environmental science, aquatic biology, glacial geology, forestry, agriculture and 20th-century farm craft.

Board member dies

Leland Slough, 57, a member of the GC Board of Overseers, died May 17 at Goshen General Hospital. He had just finished his performance as timpanist in the College Mennonite Church's production of "Noye's Fludde" when he was stricken.

A native of Elkhart, Slough was president of Arrow Tool, Inc., Elkhart, a precision machining business. He was appointed to the Board of Overseers in 1981, where he was a member of the finance and development committee.

"Lee brought wise business judgment to the management side of college life, but he also had the vision of an entrepreneur for ways to promote college growth," President Victor Stoltzfus said.

European trips canceled

The Choral Society of Southern California's European tour, which was to have included performances in London and Nuremburg, Germany, was canceled in the wake of the bombing of Libya by the United States and terrorist incidents in Europe. GC professor of music Doyle Preheim, 13 alumni and two GC students had planned to participate. The tour was canceled because the European organizations sponsoring the performances thought they could not guarantee the group's safety, Preheim said.

The art study-tour of Florence, Italy, which was to have been led by GC art professor Abner Hershberger during term three of the spring trimester, was postponed until 1987. Four of 15 students had withdrawn from the tour after the international incidents and three had expressed concern.

However, professor of English John J. Fisher and 10 students departed on schedule for the three-week study-tour, "Irish Literature in Ireland."

Still traveling to Europe this summer will be Robert Buschert, professor of physics, who will conduct research for a year in Italy; Judith Davis, associate professor of French and associate director of college relations, who will attend the fifth triennial congress of the International Courtly Literature Society in the Netherlands, and Marvin Blickenstaff, professor of music. Blickenstaff has been invited to perform at an international master class June 23-July 11 in Ernen, Switzerland. The class will be conducted by Gyorgy Sebok, an Indiana University music professor who is "one of the world's best piano teachers," Blickenstaff said.

Three retirees honored

Three members of the Goshen College faculty and staff who are retiring were honored May 2 at the faculty banquet.

They are Merle Jacobs, research professor of zoology, Daniel E. Kauffman, assistant to the president for special projects, and Don E. McCammon, manager of the Goshen College bookstore and post office.

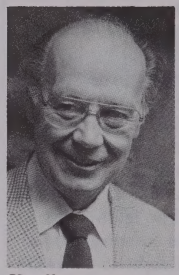
Jacobs, a 1948 Goshen College graduate, received a Ph.D. in physiological genetics from Indiana University in 1953. He did post-doctoral work and taught for four years at Duke University. He also taught at Bethany College and Eastern Mennonite College before coming to Goshen College in 1964.

He has done research on the genetics of fruit flies for 30 years. Jacobs recently has concentrated on beta-alanine, an age pigment that gives color and stiffness to fruit-fly wings.

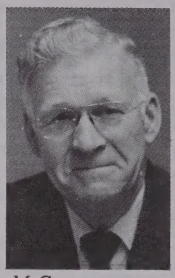
Such pigments also occur in human beings, particularly in later life, and interfere with nervous-system function. Jacobs plans to continue his research.

Kauffman, a 1944 Goshen College graduate, received a master's degree in educational administration from Columbia University in 1957. He was business manager of Hesston College, Hesston, Kan., for 14 years, secretary of stewardship of the Mennonite Church for six years and assistant superintendent of the Southmoreland (Pa.) school district for five years.

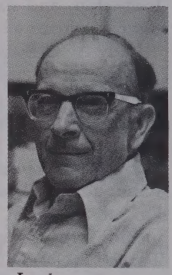
He joined the faculty as director of college relations in 1971, becoming special assistant to the president in 1981 to concentrate on the Uncommon Cause fund drive. With his wife Edith, Kauffman was honored May 22 at a luncheon and reception by the college relations department, where the establishment of the Dan and Edith Kauffman Scholarship Fund was announced.



Kauffman



McCammon



Jacobs

The Kauffmans plan to travel in retirement, visiting family and children located in six states.

McCammon, a 1945 Goshen College graduate, also received a bachelor's degree in theology from the college in 1946. He also studied at Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y., and the University of Oklahoma.

McCammon and his wife Dorothy served as missionaries in China and Japan for several years. After returning to the United States, he worked as an administrator for the Mennonite Board of Missions until joining Goshen College as bookstore manager in 1966.

Loren Stauffer, director of staff personnel, will add the duties of bookstore manager to his present duties.

McCammon plans to do volunteer work with the Mennonite Disaster Service and with The Window Community Volunteer Center in Goshen.

Sabbaticals, additions announced

Because of three resignations and a large number of faculty members taking sabbaticals in the 1986-87 school year, seven new faculty members have been hired.

The three faculty members who have resigned are Mark Kelley, assistant professor of communication, now working full-time for WSJV Television, Elkhart; Susan Fisher Miller, assistant professor of English, who will teach at Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill., in the fall; and Philip Clemens, professor of music, who will become full-time associate minister of music and worship at College Mennonite Church.

Taking sabbaticals will be Donald Clemens, professor of chemistry; Evelyn Driver, associate professor of nursing, who already has begun her sabbatical; Delmar Good, professor of economics; Arlin Hunsberger, director of international education; Duane Kauffmann, professor of psychology; John Oyer, professor of history and director of the Mennonite Historical Library, on partial sabbatical; Sue Roth, assistant professor of physical education; Kathryn Sherer, associate professor of music; Lon Sherer, professor of music; Shirley Showalter, associate professor of history and English; Stuart Showalter, professor of communication; Helen Shrode, associate professor of nursing, and Judy Wenig-Horswell, associate professor of art.

Robert Buschert, professor of physics, has begun a one-year's leave of absence to work at Euratom, the Common Market's Visiting Scientists Research Center, in Ispra, Italy.

Joining the faculty will be Ronald Brunk, in the business and economics department; Dennis Friesen-Carper, Mary Louise Hooley and David Mosley in the music department; Ann Graber in the art department; Kenneth Horst in the chemistry department; Lori Owen in the communication department and Scot Yoder in the Bible and religion department.

Micro-heroes and micro-values

By Lois Landis Kurowski

People who think there aren't any heroes anymore are wrong, Dan Hess says; there are dozens of heroes in American culture, but they are smaller than life instead of larger.

The GC professor of communication and English grew up as a "Mennonite farm-boy reading the Farm Journal and the Bible" in Lancaster County, Pa., and didn't see a movie until he was in college. When his grade-school classmates talked about the Lone Ranger, he thought they were saying "Long Ranger," Hess recalled.

As a man who missed the "Yes, Kemo Sabe" craze completely and never tried to wear a hat like Sam Spade's, he brings to the study of films and popular culture a more detached point of view than some other scholars in the field.

The incredible shrinking hero is a good example of why popular culture should be studied, Hess said. "Heroes are powerful signs, symbols that we carry around in our brains. They never tell us what to do or what to be, but they structure the meaning that we give things."

While ancient heroes such as Odysseus were multi-faceted figures who displayed outstanding virtue and competence in marriage, parenting, friendship and worship, contemporary American heroes are manufactured and superficial, he said.

"Today's heroes are made products; they each have a territory," Hess noted, meaning that each "hero" personifies only one type of person or one characteristic. "Charlie Chaplin represented the individual trying to make it in a complex world. John Wayne was 'Rambo I,' the father of so much of the current American idiom. He was the individual solving problems through chauvinistic violence."

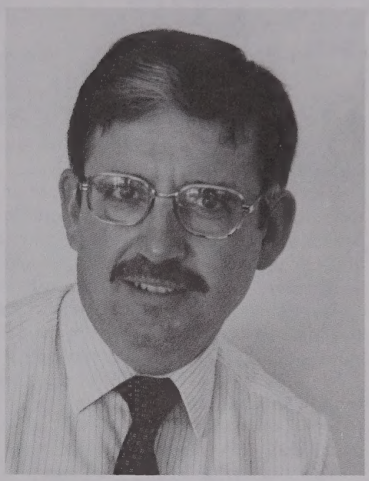
The days of having a few dominant heroes in our culture — Lincoln, Washington, Joe DiMaggio — are gone.

"Kids coming on campus today have known dozens of fabricated stars," Hess said. Celebrities such as Michael Jackson, Madonna, Mary Lou Retton or William "The Refrigerator" Perry embody only an attitude or a style, he noted.

"Many of the heroes of the 20th century don't have a philosophy at all," Hess said. "They fill a vacuum in our mass culture." However, the same mass culture devours its heroes quickly, so that the life of a hero is almost as short as a television commercial, and more and more heroes must be created.

The popularity of the Rambo character may reflect Hess' belief that "we're coming out of an anti-hero era into a time of heroes." However, if heroes have been shrinking from the multi-faceted Odysseus to a one-dimensional Mary Lou Retton, Rambo may represent the coming of the micro-hero, Hess thinks.

"When I see Rambo on the screen, there doesn't seem to be anything powerful in the scene except machines of death," Hess said. Rambo, the hero who is a misfit in society, shows "pathological heroism" and is underdeveloped morally and emotionally, he believes.



The Protestant church in the United States has a chronic shortage of modern heroes, Hess said. His first childhood heroes were traveling preachers who came to his church to conduct revivals. However, the church on a national level has produced few modern contemporary heroes, he believes. The Catholic nun Mother Teresa stands almost alone as an example of Christian selflessness, he said.

The urge to create heroes is not universal; in fact it is not found in many non-Western cultures, Hess said. And not every Western nation is as hero-crazy as the U.S. "I suspect the British don't need as many heroes as we do, because of the respect they give to the Royal Family," he noted.

Parents should not feel overwhelmed by the tidal wave of Voltrons, Rambos and Mary Lou Rettons, Hess said. They can counteract the effects of manufactured heroes by providing "a variety of attractive models and activities" and discussing advertising and TV programs with their children. At home, he and his wife Joy "try to help our daughters see the importance of people-centered activities" and try "to emphasize the role of the church and its people."

"I don't feel as though I'm standing against popular culture," Hess said. "I'm in it; I get angry about it; I get upset about it, but I don't feel helpless."

Heroic leadership

By Victor Stoltzfus

Heroic figures are a normal part of the human story. They are celebrated in the literature of the ages. They inspire us to be more vital and alive.

Recent decades have focused more on toppled heroes than on the hero or heroine we would like to emulate. We hear from daughters about witchy mothers. We read allegations about immoral or inept leadership in government, business, labor, education and the church.

The toppled hero is prominent but flawed. We feel relief that such embarrassment has not happened to us, but such stories do not ennoble the human spirit.

We preserve and transmit a heroic tradition of leadership in the Christian liberal arts college even when it is not trendy, because a Christian liberal arts college draws its truths and models from many centuries. The heroic dimension of an academic community is especially tested when a leader discovers and advocates a truth ahead of its time.

Plain living, high thinking Socrates from the fifth century B.C. is a model of leadership for educators of all centuries. He wore the same coat in summer and winter and didn't have shoes or shirt. Plato writes, "He had so schooled himself to moderation that his scanty means satisfied all his wants." His death sentence was a religious martyrdom. He was sentenced to death for neglecting the city gods and corrupting young people. But the issue was not religion vs. atheism. He believed in and prayed to a deity but was skeptical about the popular piety of Athens. His heroic devotion to teaching was displayed in the month between his sentence and his execution when he calmly continued to teach, refusing his friend Crito's offer to help him escape from prison.

The Biblical tradition behind a Christian college includes the heroic Hebrew prophets. Jeremiah was given a message that angered king, priest and people. His only support was God's promise, " 'They will fight against you but will not overcome you, for I am with you and will rescue you,' declares the Lord" (Jer. 1:19 NIV). No wonder this loving, lonely man was "the weeping prophet."

Christ, the Master teacher, is the living center of all that we believe and teach. The courage required of his heroic leadership is explicated in a recent book by Dr. Andrew Canale, a psychologist in private practice. Jesus taught that we need to deal with the inner as well as the outer opponent. "To see what one hated in the Roman, the Samaritan, the whore, or the tax collector and embrace it as one's own required great courage. . . . To show others their own inner tension as Jesus did, required an even greater act of courage, because people hate being shown a previously avoided truth about themselves." Canale's study, which includes both the anger and courage of Jesus, expounds Jesus' heroic dimension, so easily smothered in dull, familiar piety.

Goshen College has a heroic tradition, especially the generation that gave so generously to youth and the church during the Great Depression. The intellectual support for the life of the mind was as meager as the salaries (when there were salaries). Professor Edward Yoder (1893-1945) taught at Hesston (Kan.) College and Goshen College. Students at Hesston College heard him say in a chapel address, April 11, 1932, "The real test of a person's philosophy comes under trial. Its adequacy or inadequacy is revealed by the way we react to adverse circumstances and toward situations we cannot control. Do such adversities drive us to despair, or lead us to become pessimists who brood and mope? Or . . . do they challenge us to use the obstacles and the hindrances in our way as so many handy stepping stones to greater achievement, happiness and success? Much depends upon the way we have learned to look upon life, in other words upon our life philosophy" (Edward, edited by Ida Yoder, 1985).

We desperately need more heroic leaders to respond to the awesome predicaments in American public life. The greatest service of a college is to bring resourceful faculty members into contact with students who have high leadership potential. It is our responsibility in academia to teach and model the values that sustain heroic leadership. We all gain when young people grow into the reflective intelligence of the liberating arts and the courageous, compassionate vision of Christian faith. These sources of heroic leadership have been tested by centuries of human experience. They deserve our respect and devotion.

A turnaround year

By Victor Stoltzfus

Goshen College has regained its competitive edge. As we enter the 1986-87 school year, our enrollment prospects, reflected in early freshman registration and housing requests, justify the phrase, "turnaround year." Donations to the college have been the largest ever. We end the year with operational bills paid in full. We are very thankful!

This favorable result was not only desirable but necessary. We started the 1985-86 school year with an unusual drop in the size of the freshman class, which further aggravated a 10-year trend of declining enrollments. The smaller-than-expected enrollment presented us with three immediate challenges.

First, we needed to budget even more carefully for the current year and following year. Second, we needed to focus a larger proportion of institutional energy on rebuilding our enrollment. Third, we needed to plan strategically in order to set realistic future goals and have the unity of purpose to meet them.

Then we received an unexpected "gift." In November, as the last colorful leaves on our campus maples left their branches and covered the grass, a poll of 788 college and university presidents reported in U.S. News & World Report, rated Goshen College among the "best colleges in America." Favorable national rankings by the New York Times and the Great Lakes Educational Association were additional welcome news. Then in June we were awarded a $120,000 grant for our China exchange program from the Henry Luce Foundation of New York.

Our national recognition is an unmistakable compliment to Goshen's dedicated, innovative faculty. We in the administration write and tell the Goshen story. The faculty are the story. The meaning for Goshen College is not just a temporary glow of satisfaction. In the future a Goshen College degree will be less likely to require a geography lesson explaining where Goshen is. More importantly, the distinctive ideas enshrined in our mission, such as nonviolent peacemaking, international education and a synthesis of faith and learning, now have a national platform.

Strategic planning

A top priority for the year was the development of a comprehensive strategic plan to guide us in the coming years. A strategic planning committee composed of teaching and administrative faculty, staff, students, parents and a member from the Board of Overseers met frequently in the fall and winter to develop the document. With the support of grants from the Consortium for the Advancement of Private Higher Education (CAPHE) and the Eli Lilly Foundation, we surveyed five audiences within our constituency to document our strengths and weaknesses. We reviewed the 1979 mission statement of the college and reaffirmed its key elements. "Goshen College, a liberal arts educational center for the transmission, enrichment, enlargement and embodiment of the Anabaptist-Mennonite vision of the church as a community of faith for the work of God in the world, seeks to develop informed, articulate, sensitive, responsible, Christian disciples. . . ."

Our committee accepted the tough, unblinking reality of our fall 1985 enrollment (full-time equivalent of 897.5) and set conservative goals for enrollment growth for the next three years.

The Board of Overseers, administration and faculty leadership have all recognized that we need a consolidation of our academic program in order to maintain quality. A faculty committee is presently at work charged with the task of reducing our program costs by a minimum of $250,000 for 1986-87. The second phase of their work is to review the educational outcomes of our total program and propose changes in our general education, academic majors and supporting extracurricular program and services that will help us to achieve our educational goals. Our strategic plan was presented to the faculty for discussion in February and approved by the Board of Overseers in March.

This past year we struggled to become a stronger, more unified college in pursuit of common goals. We faced the adversity of a competitive marketing environment, a new administrative team still learning how to communicate with the faculty leadership and a continuing erosion of federal support for student aid. As we look back on the year, it is still too painful to say that the fall enrollment shock was a disguised blessing, but we can say that adversity caused many dedicated people to work smarter and harder at strengthening our traditional networks of support. This report will reflect on how we reached out in new and old ways to our major supporters and how they responded.

"Adversity caused many dedicated people to work smarter and harder at strengthening our traditional networks of support."

Alumni support

At the October Alumni Banquet, you not only enjoyed singing along with Bill Crofut's banjo and guitar, but you heard our request to refer student prospects to the admissions office and responded by giving us 196 names, up sharply from the previous year.

Alumni continue to lead college donors in giving. This year's contributions of $633,508 to the operating budget exceed last year's total of $609,326 by $24,182. The Alumni Board, under the leadership of Tom Bishop, initiated a challenge fund to recruit new Associates, a pledge to give an annual gift of $1,000 or more. As a result, 66 new people became Associates.

An outside consultant noticed that we have an unusually strong "legacy connection," that is, a student body in which over 75 percent are related to an alumni parent or other alumni relatives. He chided us for a lack of information on the names and ages of alumni children. You can help us collect this information by filling out the alumni questionnaire you received in the mail this summer. We are completing this important effort now.

Students and faculty

The student body also did their share in promoting the college. As early as Thanksgiving vacation, pastors told me of students returning to their home communities as enthusiastic advocates of the college. Some seniors adopted the goal of replacing themselves by recruiting a freshman before they graduated. On campus the Black Student Union was successful in an all-night volleyball fund-raiser that provided a minority student scholarship, and the senior class designated its gift for a freshman scholarship. Students were also involved in attracting new students through choir tours, jazz band tours and programs in churches. They assisted the admissions team in contacting prospective students and by serving as resource persons for campus open house programs.

The teaching faculty always make their central contribution to enrollment by making the classroom and laboratory come alive with the joy (and pain) of learning. Small improvements in program are happening continually, such as training in word processing for all freshmen and free access to personal computers in the Schertz Computer Center.

In addition, faculty were ready with a phone call or letter to back up the work of our admissions team. Eight faculty members received funding from the CAPHE-Lilly grants to engage in special promotional activities on and off campus. The most innovative was a new Deciders program that brings together resources in testing and academic and career advising to help students make choices about their majors.

Goshen has a tradition of substantial faculty involvement in the governance of the college. The hours of faculty time contributed through the major committees of the college is as impressive as faculty financial giving.

Administration, admissions and college relations

The President's Office is a visible symbol of college mission and vision. It has been a privilege for me to represent Goshen College on and off campus to business, government, other colleges, higher education associations, congregations and conferences, parents and alumni. Other administrative faculty and staff work behind the scenes at such important tasks as answering the mail, keeping the campus attractive and the computers humming.

Our admissions people are now an experienced team with an excellent system of managing information and prompt response to inquiries. Their work is informed by the latest research on college choice and marketing. Can you blame them for throwing a party when the number of freshman applications hit a 10-year high?

The most important truth the admissions office is teaching us is that enrollment is an institutional responsibility, not only the work of admissions counselors. Numerous parents have complimented our people for their personal attention, timely response to questions and genuine interest in their sons and daughters.

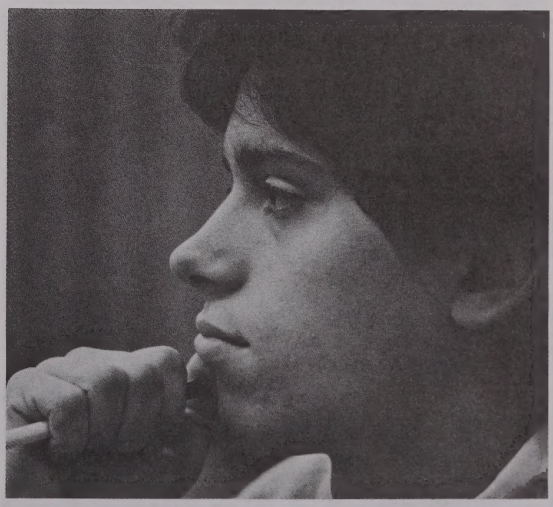
Our College Relations Department has also drawn closer to its donor constituency and has new plans for the coming year. The successful conclusion of the first phase of our Uncommon Cause campaign for deferred gifts, under the leadership of Dan Kauffman, former Director of College Relations, was a highlight of the year. Pledges now total $20 million. Dan has provided planning and new materials for an eight-year total resource-development campaign starting in October to prepare us for a spectacular celebration when Goshen College turns 100 years old in 1994.

Parents and the church

Parents have also been a part of our turnaround year. Parents of current students have told the Goshen story to parents of prospective students. Jim and Fern Derstine, co-chairs of Parent Council, gave effective leadership by providing a direct source of written and verbal counsel to the college. Your responses to our survey research are appreciated and a reference point in our planning. Marie and I have met several hundred of you in restaurants and churches and heard you express what you believe should happen at Goshen College. Your creative ideas and constructive criticism were passed on to responsible college officials. We were sensitive to your concerns about college costs in a tangible way with our one-year tuition freeze. You have given us clear support in working at alcohol education and in clarifying our expectations for student behavior.

The Mennonite Church and the larger Christian families of God have strengthened us in this crucial year. Our congregational and conference aid match announced in December, 1985, has stimulated new congregational and conference aid programs. Mennonite Economic Development Associates (MEDA) is initiating a new computerized network of job openings for graduates of Mennonite colleges. A new annual meeting between the college and Mennonite Conference leaders, who are reorganizing into a Conference Advisory Board, begins this October.

Our contacts with thousands of church people in congregations and regional conference meetings has given us a new dedication to providing lay and ministerial leadership for church growth. The Mennonites and other denominations are being newly energized by ambitious goals. The 75 member Christian College Coalition has welcomed Goshen for its leadership in international and peace education. They offer us a voice in Washington and helpful professional seminars for faculty and administrators.



Prayer is a means of support that has strengthened us all this past year. Faculty groups gathered periodically for prayer, and Marie and I know of three small church groups that regularly pray for us and the work of the college. Numerous individuals, including Alta Mae Erb of Scottdale, Pa., and Robert Baker of Elkhart, Ind., have a regular prayer ministry on our behalf. Our central administrative team and spouses benefited from a 12-hour silent retreat this spring. Some people who have been critical of college people or been irked by some immature incident have nonetheless offered their prayer support. Thanks. We need it again this new school year.

Community support

In this past year we've strengthened our ties to our local community. Alumnus Charles Ainlay has continued to chair

"Prayer is a means of support that has strengthened us all this past year."

the President's Advisory Board, composed of local business and professional leaders. They brought business insights to our strategic planning, as well as helped us build bridges to our community.

Thousands of Elkhart County people came on campus this year for the first time. Such events as a soccer program for area youth, humorist Garrison Keillor, a Christmas madrigal feast, the Great Race and numerous other drama, music and public affairs lectures attracted large audiences. Goshen Rotary honored the college with a special recognition program and invited the current and past presidents. The county continued to be a valuable laboratory for student interns in teaching, ministry, nursing, business, computer science and many other student majors.

The Goshen College Board of Overseers, chaired by Arlene Mark, deserves prominent mention in a list of college supporters. Its central task is governance, but in addition, board members help to obtain the resources that make college rhetoric real. In the past year board members have solicited new Associates, accompanied the president in contacts with donors and contacted prospective students and their parents. In the December 1985 board meeting, they originated the idea for a tuition freeze and room discounts to attract more juniors and seniors back to the dorms. We have been well served by a board that brings leadership skills from church vocations, business and education.

Being realistic about the future

What does a "turnaround year" mean for the future? We would do well to see one good year as parallel to an individual farm or hospital that had a good year amidst adverse condition for the total industry. We must realistically expect uncertainty and difficulty to continue into the next decade. Our beginning this year with severe enrollment pressure has taught us that we must answer the question, "Why Goshen?" amidst many attractive college options. As we anticipate the fall, our year-end success encourages us to face the ups and downs of the future with the courage to innovate. We are most grateful for the strong network of our friends and supporters who are responding to us as we become more responsive to you.

It has been a nerve-wracking, exhilarating year. I wouldn't have missed it for anything.

By William R. Zuercher

Last year's report from the business manager noted that J. Robert Kreider was retiring after 29 years at Goshen College in college relations, development and business operations. This year was the first year for controller Mardene Kelley and myself. Mardene ably stepped into the controller's office after the untimely death of Dana Sherman. Her prior experience as acting controller and in developing and implementing the computerized management information systems for the college has given her valuable skills in using the computer in business office and accounting procedures.

The accompanying financial statements reflect some decreased financial activity relating to a decrease in enrollment during 1985-86. We ended the year exactly even — no surplus and no loss. It is not that we are such astute budgeters, but that, as in past years, we had available capital gains from contributed stock. We used only what was needed from that stock gain to break even. The Board of Overseers has taken a position that such income should not be routinely used to balance the budget in future years.

The generous support of alumni, churches, businesses and friends was a major factor in ending the year favorably and is a source of great encouragement to us.

During the past year two veteran administrators retired — Kenneth King as physical plant director and Don McCammon as bookstore manager. Coincident with Kenneth's retirement, a contract was negotiated with the ServiceMaster Corporation for the management of physical plant and custodial operations. Loren Stauffer, director of staff personnel, assumed responsibility for managing the bookstore on a half-time basis.

A new relationship was established with the architectural and engineering firm of LeRoy Troyer and Associates. With them, major planning is under way on improving science facilities and equipment, the feasibility of a recreation/fitness building in cooperation with one or more other organizations and updating the campus master plan for land and facilities use. A much-appreciated Marine Biology facility was used for the first time this year by the spring-term class in the Florida Keys.

My predecessor closed his report last year by acknowledging the faithful support of alumni and friends during the years he was on the staff. As a newcomer, I am impressed also with the sense of partnership that exists between the college and our many supporters. We want to remain worthy of such support and to provide the kind of educational programs and atmosphere that are attractive to students, families, the church and other friends.

Alumni set fund record

By Laurie Neumann Nafziger

GC alumni respond when presented with a need. This year was no exception.

Alumni faced the largest annual fund goal yet. They met it, exceeded it and went on to establish a new record for annual giving. With 32.3 percent of alumni participating, $633,508 unrestricted dollars were given to the annual fund, surpassing last year's good effort by over $24,000. In addition, $338,489 alumni dollars were contributed to restricted funds.

As we close the 1985-86 books, the statistics reveal other gratifying displays of support: the size of the average annual fund gift rose 7.8 percent, from $128 last year to $138 this year; this year's phonothon effort resulted in $106,088, up from $102,227 last year; and 530 alumni gave first-time gifts to the college.

On behalf of the Alumni Board, I extend sincere thanks to all alumni who supported their college in 1985-86 with their prayers, advocacy and dollars.

You too can recruit students

You can help students get acquainted with GC during a special Campus Open House coinciding with Alumni Weekend, Oct. 3 and 4. Why not invite your son or daughter; brother or sister; or other prospective students?

Send the coupon to the Admissions Office, Goshen College, Goshen, Ind., 46526. Or call toll free (800) 348-7422 or collect from Indiana and Canada (219) 533-3161.

From carpenter to med school

To get into medical school, one must study for eight years of elementary and junior high school, four years of high school and four years of college. Right? Not necessarily.

Harley Yoder '85 took a different educational track. Born and raised in an Older Order Amish family, Harley wanted to attend high school after his one-room Amish school days were over. But circumstances prevented it.

So at 15 Harley began working as a carpenter. "I took a lot of pride in my work. I was happy and I'm glad I had those five years doing that work," he recounts now.

Harley learned about voluntary service opportunities at a Mennonite Church he had started to attend, and he ended up in Dublin, Ireland, where a Mennonite mission was just starting.

There he met people from Goshen College who encouraged him to consider further education. Harley came home, passed the GED tests for a high school diploma with flying colors and entered GC in the fall of 1981.

At GC, Harley had his first exposure to science courses and his interest in medicine was sparked. However, not wanting to rush his decision about a major or career, he entered voluntary service in Brazil under the Mennonite Central Committee. "I decided to take a year out, do voluntary service and rethink things. I wanted time to decide what to do."

Returning to Goshen College, Harley finished his studies for his degree and found himself in a not unusual predicament: he needed money for future schooling.

Then he found the perfect job.

This past year Harley worked in the Division of Medical Genetics at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Md., doing research among the Amish people of Pennsylvania. His particular area of research was with the Amish who have dwarfs as members of their families.

With these valuable experiences behind him, Harley entered medical

A tribute to Roman Gingerich

A small group of alumni have established an endowment fund to honor professor emeritus of physical education Roman Gingerich '41.

Roman devoted all his professional life to the physical education program at GC. He recruited scores of students over the years and encouraged them to participate in the various athletic programs offered by the college. In some cases he went the second mile, providing employment to students, enabling them to earn income for their education.

To honor and pay tribute to Roman for his 44 years of service, a group of alumni have put together a $27,500 challenge fund. This fund will match dollar-for-dollar all designated contributions.

The Physical Education Department will receive the income from this endowment on an annual basis for above-budget projects. The department will determine each year how these funds are to be used.

Announcing

A new book to renew old friendships

The 1987 Alumni Directory

Have you thought of writing your college roommate lately? If so, do you have her address? If you don't, the 1987 Goshen College Alumni Directory will be just the book for you!

The directory, which will have alumni listed in alphabetical order by class and geographical area, is available for $11.95 (including postage and handling) if you order by Nov. 1. After Nov. 1, 1986, directories will cost $13.95.

If you haven't already done so, please fill out the alumni biographical-update form you received in the mail in June.

Check the information already printed on that form,

Correct it if necessary,

Add the information we've requested, and Return it promptly.

Thanks for your help!

Ephrata, Pa., until Sept. 30. They then plan to return to Glendale, Ariz., and Lloyd will become manager of the Oasis International Gift and Thrift Shop, which is one of the 110 MCC stores.

Pearl Hartz '49, Telford, Pa., a member of the Christian education leadership team at Blooming Glen Mennonite Church, received an M.Div. from Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary in May.

Alastair and Alice Yeater Lamont '44, Aberdeen, Scotland, are serving at Denburn Parish Church.

Paul '45 and Mary Slagel Lederach '50, Scottdale, Pa., have been appointed to a four-month teaching assignment at Union Biblical Seminary, Pune, India. Their assignment began Sept. 13.

Don McCammon '45, Goshen, has made Greencroft a nicer place to live. For 17 years he has been a pastor, teacher, counselor and visitor in hospital rooms and apartments. He was given a special Greencroft volunteer pin upon retirement from his volunteer position.

Katie Ropp '41, Hesston, Kan., is retiring from the accounting department after 42 years of service at Hesston College. Since 1970 she has worked exclusively in payroll and collection of federal loans — the last two years, with only payroll, on a part-time basis.

You're never too old to learn — or to teach.

Just ask 81-year-old Perry Miller '31 who has been tutoring 75-year-old Russell Conder through the Goshen Literacy Coalition since January 1986. He'll be happy to tell you about this retirement activity, one of his many.

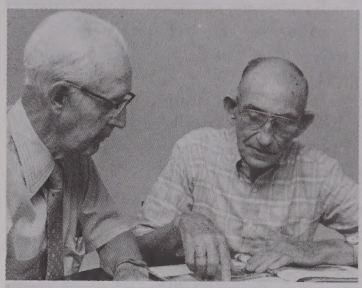
Assistant professor emeritus of education Perry Miller retired from 16 years of service at Goshen College in 1973. His retirement has been full and rich, as he's occupied himself with Choice Books, sponsoring a Vietnamese family, bowling, golf and spending time with family.

When Sue Herr Burkholder '52, volunteer director of the Goshen Literacy Coalition, approached Perry about tutoring, he wasn't sure he could do it. However, after some persuading on her part, he agreed to try. He's glad now that he did.

Perry meets once a week with Russell at the Goshen Public Library. The two men sit together with a book between them while Russell reads out loud softly. He reads smoothly, if slowly, pausing only occasionally to sound out a word or get assistance from Perry. Their goal: to read a newspaper.

"Russell has a good command of the English language, and that helps a lot," Perry commented. "We work to increase his vocabulary so he can read the Goshen News."

While the Literacy Coalition provides guidelines, materials, training and support, Perry develops his own lesson plan for the sessions. In a one-hour session, Perry plans three or four activities.



"This is something I always wanted to do — teach an adult to read — but I thought I'd waited too long," Perry said. "However, now I'm doing it, and we're both better for it."

Class of '35 gift

Fifty years ago this past fall, the graduating class presented the college with a gift of pine, spruce and fir trees.

In honor of its 50th anniversary, the class of '35 made another gift to the college. Led by class president Levi Hartzler '35, the class channeled their gift to both the general endowment fund and the Peace Studies Endowment Fund.

The Peace Studies Endowment Fund was established to ensure that peace studies will always be a part of Goshen College. To date, GC has received over $373,000 from many contributors toward the $500,000 needed to endow a program such as this.

Deaths

Eunice Josephson Metzger '59, Dallas, Texas, July 2. She taught in Wisconsin and Elkhart, Ind., schools, retiring in 1972.

Lois Newman Shelley '58, South Bend, Ind., Feb. 1986.

Ferrel Gibson Stein '57, Belleview, Fla., June 22. A retired teacher, she taught in the Elkhart (Ind.) Community Schools for 21 years.

Notes

Elizabeth Albrecht Eberle '58, Denver, Colo., was a delegate to the Republican State Convention this year. She commented, "It was quite an experience to see how politics work!".

Robert '70 and Helen Stoesz Peifer '57 are active in the Dallas (Texas) Mennonite Fellowship.

Dellis Schrock '56, Casselton, N.D., received the Outstanding Service Award at the 59th anniversary spring conference of the North Dakota Council of Teachers of English. He has taught high school English and creative writing for 30 years and for the last 15 years has chaired the Fargo South High School's English department. He was elected mayor of Casselton in 1978.

Allen K. Yoder '61, Winston-Salem, N.C., teaches vocational skills to mentally handicapped youth. He also works with lay ministries at the emerging congregation, Oak Hill Mennonite Church.

Death

Blanche Stanley Michael '60, wife of Kenneth Michael, 22331 S.R. 119, Goshen, July 6. A teacher for 23½ years in four area schools, she was also a lifetime deaconess and Sunday school teacher in the West Goshen Church of the Brethren.

Marriage

Gene Yoder, Elkhart, Ind., and Fern Cender Rupp '63, Sarasota, Fla., June 21.

Notes

Glenda Gautsche Allen '63, Archbold, Ohio, is a staff nurse in the Stress Center at Fulton County Health Center, Wauseon.

Merle Hostetler '62, manager of community support services at Oaklawn Community Mental Health Center, Elkhart, Ind., is involved with the continuing care team, residential services and the social club. He also is part of the Lexington House on-call rotation.

as requested. Much of her work has been concentrated in the village of Obeyeyie, where Mennonites have had a presence on and off for 20 years.

Adolf '63 and Eileen Zimmerly Loeffler '63, Sherwood Park, Alberta, are both teachers. Presently a special education instructor, he has taught for 23 years. Eileen has taught for 12 years and presently teaches early childhood students.

Marlin '60 and Ruthann Gardner Miller '62, Elkhart, Ind., will spend August through December in Dublin, Ireland, as part of Miller's yearlong sabbatical from Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries. From January through June, they will live in Princeton, N.J., where he will be a member of the Center for Theological Inquiry, doing research and writing on a systematic theology project.

Joan Williams '61, Chicago, Ill., started a toy, gift and card shop, Joan's Place, Inc., high above The State Street Mall. "It literally overhangs zero point in Chicago's numbering system in The Loop. It is really tough to get people to shop above street level." The shop is located at 7 W. Madison St., Suite 901.

Death

Gretchen Lea Tinsler, 16, daughter of Paul and Sandra Richer Tinsler '66, 1-5540-16, Wauseon, Ohio 43567, May 22, from injuries received in an automobile accident.

Birth

Larry and Michele Manogue Stuckey '69, Toledo, Ohio, Erin Marie, May 15.

Notes

Russell Freed '66, East Lansing, Mich., associate professor of international agronomy crop science at Michigan State University, has been named deputy director of the bean and cowpea collaborative research support project (CRSP). The CRSP is a USAID program to increase the production and use of beans and cowpeas throughout the world.

Ervie '65 and Mary Yoder Glick '71, Marburg, West Germany, are serving as resident directors of Brethren Colleges Abroad's Junior Year Abroad Program.

Clinton Hofstetter '65, Apple Creek, Ohio, is physical plant director of The College of Wooster.

S. Roy Kaufman '66, pastor at Pulaski (Iowa) Mennonite Church since 1972, has accepted a call to serve as pastor of the Science Ridge Mennonite Church, Sterling, Ill.

Mervin Mast '68, El Dorado, Ark., administrator of Hudson Nursing Home, was named administrator of the year by the Arkansas Nursing Home Association.

Jim and Judith Miller '66 completed five years as overseas mission associates with Mennonite Board of Missions at Kodaikanal International School, India. They are currently living in Elkhart, Ind., and exploring job options.

Willis Poyser '66 is rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity in Memphis, Tenn.

Sue Clemmer Steiner '69, Waterloo, Ontario, interim chaplain at Conrad Grebel College, also serves as chairperson of the Inter-Mennonite Mission and Service Board of Ontario.

Richard '66 and Judy Stealy Stuckey '66, Lexington, Ky., began a one-year sabbatical leave

Notes

Irene Schertz Beachey traded a school bus for school books when she decided to enter law school. After taking a bachelor's degree from Indiana University at South Bend this spring, she is attending Indiana University at Indianapolis this fall. She moved there with her husband Bob and two sons.

In July, Dan Byler left Nicaragua after 13 years of mission work there. He plans to study for a year and then go to another country for continued mission work.

John and Nancy Kinsinger Halder, Parnell, Iowa, survivors of their farm's failure, now answer the MCC Farm Hotline phone (800-553-8371), one way that the larger Mennonite Church is responding to its farm families in crisis. The Halders have found that helping others is one of the best ways of overcoming discouragement. "We survived our farm's failure because of the people who cared," they said.

Roberta Miller, LaGrange, Ind., was arts and crafts director for the summer at Camp Amigo, Sturgis, Mich.

J. D. Stahl, assistant professor of English at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University of Blacksburg, Va., received an NEH Summer Fellowship to participate in a seminar, "Literary Fairy Tales, 1840-1920," at Princeton University for three months.

He also wrote an article, "American Myth in European Disguise: Fathers and Sons in The Prince and the Pauper," which appeared in the May 1986 issue of American Literature.

Marriage

Ronald Detwiler and Patricia Cole, Bryan, Ohio, Dec. 21.

Births

Wayne '79 and Karen Swartzendruber Braden, Elkhart, Ind., Christopher Robert, May 19.

Calvin and Mary Yoder Leichty, Albany, Ore., Kristen Michelle, born Jan. 25, 1986, received for adoption May 20.

Daryl and Karen Neuenschwander Martin, Berne, Ind., Eric Lee, March 22.

Note

Greg and Ellen Witmer Bowman, Fresno, Ohio, recently took up residence in the home they designed and built with the help of neighbors and several craftspersons. Greg is news editor for The Tribune of Coshocton, and Ellen is on leave from her position at a farm produce and country crafts market.

1975

John Imhoff, Roanoke, Ill., and Darlene Miller, Morton, Ill., March 22.

David Robison and Judith Housour, Goshen, June 29, 1985.

Births

Glenn and Rita Fisher Burkholder '76, Bloomington, Ind., Katherine Anne, April 24.

John and Emily Yoder Huffman, Salem, Ohio, Melody Sue, Nov. 3, 1983, and Joshua Eugene, April 22.

Bradley and Ann Bender Moyer, Plymouth, Vt., Molly Jean, Aug. 3.

Hans and Christine Gerig Thogersen, Berlin, West Germany, Sara Kathryn Antonie, Feb. 7.

Notes

Rich Kremer, Lebanon, N.H., is completing a book on Hermann von Helmholtz, a 19th century German physicist and philosopher.

Roger Paul, Lewisburg, W.Va., does auditing work for several companies. Marianne Herr Paul '76 attends medical school at the West Virginia School of Osteopathic Medicine.

Randy Springer, Hopedale, Ill., has begun off-farm employment as plant superintendent of

Faculty and staff

Notes

Clayton Funk (staff '84-86) has moved to New York City where he began doctoral study at Columbia University. His study will center on art and education with additional work in organ.

Ruth Horst (staff '63-86) began June 9 as secretary for Student and Young Adult Services of Mennonite Board of Missions, Elkhart, Ind.

Esta Yoder Hostetler (staff '64-78), Goshen, earned a first place award in the canning division of the home and family arts competition at the Elkhart County Fair with her Amish Church Pickles.

Croyle critical of competency testing

"I knew I was supposed to be here when I found a teaching job only days after I arrived in San Antonio," said Nancy Croyle '83. Nancy teaches at Bowden Elementary, an inner city school, for her voluntary service assignment with Mennonite Board of Missions.

Texas has just this year instituted a competency testing system. Nancy took a test to "prove" her competence as a teacher. In April her students took a test to determine whether they passed or failed first grade.

"If my students fail that test, they fail first grade. I don't have anything to say about it. I have children who can't speak English, and they're supposed to do as well as native English speakers," Nancy explained. "The state administrators aren't in touch with the realities of teaching children whose first language is Spanish." During the summer Nancy worked toward her English as a second language endorsement, partly to help her cope with the problem in her own classroom.

Nancy has decided to extend her VS term for one more year.

In fiscal 1985-86, GC saw 95 corporations — four more than last year — contribute $45,206, slightly less than the $46,461 given the previous year.

Each year more and more companies are developing matching gift plans for their employees. Friends and alumni of Goshen College interested in doubling their contributions should inquire at their employers' personnel offices or contact the college relations office at GC for more information.

Uncommon Cause exceeds expectations

In 1979 Goshen College began planning for an endowment campaign called Uncommon Cause. In a series of weekend meetings prospective donors met with college officials to hear the vision and program of the college. The response of the participants to the weekends exceeded our most optimistic expectations.

At the June 30 completion of the drive, commitments of over $20 million had been made. Of that total, $6,392,922 has been received, with $646,137 coming this past year. The remaining $15 million is in the form of pledges and will be placed in the endowment fund when they are received, with the exception of those designated for campus improvements (line 7). Campus improvements include the Science Hall remodeling fund.

Commitments

1.	Student Aid	$ 3,687,860
2.	Good Library and MHL	894,200
3.	Peace Studies	413,177
4.	Faculty Chairs	2,488,320
5.	Departmental Designations	1,487,212
6.	Undesignated (General Endowment)	9,333,036
7.	Campus Improvements	1,832,114
	Total	$20,135,919

Early history of MHL clarified

The Mennonite Publishing House was a major source of books for The Mennonite Historical Library in its early years. That fact, not mentioned in our history of the MHL published in the May Bulletin, came to light as the result of comments received from several GC alumni who read the history.

The history of the MHL, these alumni said, should have included more information about the role of John Horsch and the Mennonite Publishing House in building up the MHL's collection.

As a young immigrant from Germany living in Elkhart, Ind., Horsch spent a good portion of his assets in accumulating the beginnings of a personal Mennonite historical library. Later he gave his library to John F. Funk, prominent Mennonite leader and publisher in Elkhart, as payment for a debt. Some years later when Horsch was working for the Mennonite Publishing House in Scottdale, Pa., he persuaded his new employer to purchase the library from Funk and move it to Scottdale.

While he was employed at the Mennonite Publishing House, Horsch encouraged it to expand the library holdings, which it did. After Horsch's death in 1941, Harold Bender, his son-in-law, persuaded the Mennonite Publishing House to transfer a major part of the collection of about 1,500 titles to Goshen College where it became part of the MHL.

"The Horsch collection was a very valuable addition to the MHL," said Nelson Springer, currator emeritus of the Mennonite Historical Library. "It rounded out the MHL collection, making it more complete in Mennonite titles and adding works of Swiss and German Reformation history."

The Horsch collection has remained a separate collection in the MHL to this day.

We include this update on the origins of the MHL in the interests of making its history more complete.

Student leaders named

New student leaders already are working to plan activities for the 1986-87 school year.

Chairing the Campus Activities Council is senior Ken Rodgers, a music major from Hesston, Kan. Joining him on the committee are Beth Hochstetler, a junior elementary education major from New Carlisle, Ind.; Vanessa King, a junior social work major from Gordonville, Pa.; Gretchen Yoder, a junior Spanish major from Gilroy, Calif.; Jay Shearer, a sophomore communication major from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and Ken Nyce, a sophomore physics major from Lancaster, Pa.

Joining the Student Central Committee Executive Committee are seniors Steve Walter, a business major from Montoursville, Pa., Berdine Mininger, an art major from Telford, Pa., and junior Kerry Stutzman, a communication major from Englewood, Colo.

Fall editor of the Record will be Carl Good, a senior English major from Souderton, Pa.; Jon Sweigart, a senior English major from Ronks, Pa., will be the winter Record editor. Sonja Bontrager, a senior English major from Hesston, Kan., will edit the 1986-87 Maple Leaf.

Working at WGCS will be Stan Martin, a senior communication major from Fresno, Calif., as station manager; Jonathan Graber, a senior Bible and religion major from La Jara, Colo., as program director, and Ken Rodgers, a senior music major from Hesston, Kan., as music director. David North, a senior communication major from Lombard, Ill., will be chief announcer; Mel Glick, a junior communication major from Shipshewana, Ind., will be traffic manager, and Durrell Ramer, a senior communication major from New Paris, Ind., will be production manager.

Four begin internships

Four April, 1986, graduates are beginning dietetic internships this fall. The four graduated with majors in food and nutrition with a dietetic emphasis. Two will be interns at the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics, Iowa City. They are Amy E. Bixler, Iowa City, and Ann C. Shetler, Pigeon, Mich. Kathleen D. Kurtz, Salem, Ohio, will be an intern at Riverside Methodist Hospital, Columbus, Ohio. Christine J. Lindell, Minneapolis, Minn., will be an intern at the Medical College of Virginia Hospital, Richmond.

Only graduates of programs approved by the American Dietetics Association may apply for internships, said Sharon Friesen Penner, assistant professor of home economics and a registered dietitian. Nationally, only about 40 percent of those who apply are accepted. Since the ADA approved the Goshen College program in 1984, all GC students applying for internships have been accepted.

Acceptance into an internship is one way to become eligible to take the national registration examination. Dietitians who pass the test become registered dietitians. Another route is earning a master's degree in dietetics, Penner said.

Comedies win peace - play contest

Scott Memmer, Glendale, Calif., is the winner of the 1986 Goshen College Peace Play Contest. Luigi Jannuzzi, New York City, received second place.

As the first-place winner, Memmer will receive a $500 cash award, and his play will be produced at GC October 4-5. Jannuzzi's play also will be produced at GC.

"Shadows," Memmer's winning play, tells how three elderly people react when they hear that nuclear war has begun between the United States and the Soviet Union, Friesen said. Set in the late 1960s, the play is a comedy.

"They wish they had lived in a world that was more humane," said Lauren Friesen, contest coordinator, but the characters decide that they should enjoy what little time is left.

Memmer, a native of Cleveland, is a magna cum laude graduate of California State University, Northridge, Calif. He wrote "Shadows" in just three days and has revised it several times since.

Jannuzzi's play, "The Barbarians Are Coming," also is a comedy, Friesen said. It tells about a medieval king frantically preparing to ward off a barbarian invasion. However, when the barbarian arrives, he wants only food, and, getting it, leaves.

Jannuzzi is a 1975 graduate of the University of Notre Dame and received a master's degree in ethics from Notre Dame in 1977. He has been active in professional theater around New York City and has written nine plays.

The contest is underwritten by the Disciples of Peace, a Middlebury, Ind., charitable fellowship. Previous winners were "The Dove, The Hawk and the Phoenix," by Norman A. Bert of Montana State College in 1982, and "After the First Death," by Los Angeles drama critic Richard Stayton in 1984.

Goshen awarded China grant

The Henry Luce Foundation, Inc., New York City, has awarded a three-year grant totaling $120,000 to Goshen College for its pioneer undergraduate exchange program with the People's Republic of China.

The program, negotiated in 1980 by Goshen College President Emeritus J. Lawrence Burkholder, was the first undergraduate exchange program between a college or university in the United States and the People's Republic of China since President Richard Nixon's historic visit.

In a letter to Goshen College President Victor Stoltzfus, Henry Luce III, president of the Luce Foundation, said, "The Goshen program offers a rare opportunity for American undergraduate students to live and study in China, while also giving Chinese teachers from Sichuan Province a first-hand experience with American culture.

"As China continues to rebuild its educational infrastructure, and as Americans develop a more sophisticated appreciation of China, we believe that the values represented by Goshen's China Program should be encouraged," Luce added.

The Luce Foundation selected the Goshen grant proposal from a list of many other university and college requests for funding.

Said Stoltzfus, "We are gratified that our China Educational Exchange program has attracted recognition and support from a national foundation that has longstanding commitment to Chinese-U.S. studies and relations."

Goshen College has sent 20 undergraduates and two faculty leaders to Chengdu, the capital of Sichuan Province, each fall since 1980 to teach English at Sichuan Normal University for 17 weeks. Since the first group left in August, 1980, more than 100 Goshen College students have participated in the China exchange.

In return, nine Chinese teachers of English from Sichuan Province come to Goshen College to study and a Chinese professor comes to teach on campus for 32 weeks. The agreement is between Goshen College and the Sichuan Bureau of Higher Education, so that all the Chinese exchange scholars come from Sichuan province.

The Martin Foundation, Elkhart, Ind., is another major supporter for the Chinese exchange, as it has been since the program's inception.

Former Goshen College President J. Lawrence Burkholder noted that the China exchange program, along with the other SST programs, "represents a pioneering effort" by Goshen College. The work of the Goshen students "has an element of peacemaking — it has led to better understanding that cross-cultural relationships are possible if people have a positive attitude."

MHL marks 80th year

The Mennonite Historical Library celebrated the 80th anniversary of its founding June 13 with a reception for the public in the basement of the Harold and Wilma Good Library. The library was created June 13, 1906, by a resolution passed by the Goshen College Alumni Association.

Twelve join faculty

Goshen College will gain 12 new full-time faculty members this fall. They include Ronald Brunk, in the business and economics department; Dennis Friesen-Carper, Mary Louise Hooley and David Mosley, music department; Ann Graber, art department; Kenneth Horst, chemistry department; Pat Springer Shoemaker, resident director of Miller-Kratz dormitory; and Kay Bontrager-Singer, resident director of Yoder dormitory.

Also joining the faculty will be Scot Yoder, Bible and religion department; Bradley Miller, associate in college relations; Carol Murray, English department; and Phil Rush, associate director of student finance.

Bontrager-Singer graduated from GC in 1985, where she majored in social work. Since then, she has studied at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in Elkhart, Ind.

Brunk comes from Bethel College, North Newton, Kan., where he was chairman of the department of business and economics. He received an A.A. degree from Hesston College in 1963, a B.A. degree from GC in 1965 and an M.B.A. degree from Wichita State University, Kansas, in 1980. He also studied at Goshen Biblical Seminary from 1968 to 1971. Brunk will teach courses in accounting and management.

Friesen-Carper comes from Houston, Texas, where he has been music director of the First Christian Church and of the Pasadena Philharmonic Society while working on his Ph.D. at Rice University. He received a B.A. degree from Bethel College in 1979 and an M.M. degree from Rice University in 1985. He has also studied at Kansas State University. Friesen-Carper will conduct the orchestra, jazz band and teach theory and conducting.

Graber, a 1981 GC graduate, comes from Scottdale, Pa., where she has been art director, designer and supervisor at the Mennonite Publishing House. She received an M.A. from Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, this summer. Graber will teach art classes the first trimester and then become graphic artist in the information services department winter trimester.

Hooley, a 1983 GC graduate, comes from Madison, Wis., where she has been studying at the University of Wisconsin. She received the M.M. degree from Wisconsin in 1985. Hooley will teach and serve as administrator in the piano preparatory department.

Horst comes from Christopher Dock High School, Lansdale, Pa., where he has taught chemistry since 1976. A 1974 GC graduate, he received an M.A. degree from Villanova University in 1983. He previously taught at Bethany Christian High School, Goshen, 1973-1976. Horst will teach chemistry courses.

Miller, a 1971 GC graduate, comes from Midland, Mich., where he served as pastor of the Midland Mennonite Church for seven years. Previously, he was an associate pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Middlebury, Ind. He has studied at Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries. Miller will specialize in church relations and in special gifts to the college.

Coming from Georgia is David Mosley, who will teach Goshen's comparative arts course, "the arts," music theory and brass instruments. He received a B.S. degree from Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., in 1980, an M.M. degree from the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., in 1983, and expects to receive a Ph.D. from Emory University, Atlanta, Ga., in 1987. He also has studied at Florida State University.

Murray comes to Indiana from North Dakota where she recently completed requirements for an M.A. in English from the University of North Dakota. She received her B.A. from Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., in 1983. She will teach expository writing and "The Literate Voice" this fall.

Rush, a 1985 GC graduate, comes to student finance after working in GC's accounting office as manager. Previously, Rush worked in accounting and computer applications for Pine Manor, Inc., Goshen.

Shoemaker is a 1978 GC graduate. She received the A.A. degree from Hesston College in 1975. Most recently, Shoemaker worked at Goshen College as secretary for academic departments in the Newcomer Center. She has worked as a teacher aid at Calvary Christian School, Inglewood, Calif.

Yoder, a 1983 GC graduate, has spent the last two years at Bowling Green State University, Ohio, where he earned an M.M. in applied philosophy. Yoder also worked as a graduate teaching assistant in the department.

Hartzler: "Night soccer more fun"

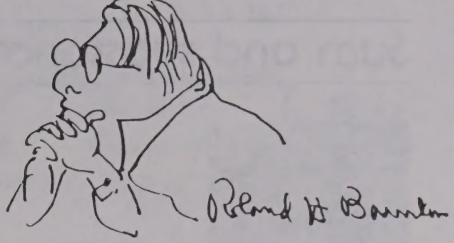
Goshen College soccer fans can now enjoy the excitement of night games. This summer the college soccer field was equipped with a new lighting system.

Soccer coach Dwain Hartzler said the lights will be beneficial in four ways: they will help reduce schedule conflicts for college activities, make it easier for the community and alumni to attend soccer games, liven up campus spirit and be an attraction for potential students.

Hartzler also prefers playing under the lights because it's more fun. At night the wind is usually weaker, and the pool of light on the field cuts out distractions in the background, he said.

Hartzler raised money for the lights with revenue from soccer camps — held annually at Goshen College for young local soccer players — and donations from alumni soccer players.

The reality of paradox



Sum and Substance: Essays by J. Lawrence Burkholder, edited by Edward Zuercher (Pinchpenny Press, 1986), review by Richard A. Kauffman.

Two Roman centurions, standing guard by Jesus' cross, were commenting on the irony of the crucifixion of this seemingly innocent man from Nazareth.

Said one to the other, "I hear he was a great man."

"Yes," replied the second, "and it's said he was a great teacher."

"But, unfortunately," responded the first, "he never published."

J. Lawrence Burkholder, known affectionately as "JLB," has been one of the Mennonite Church's most capable leaders and thinkers in the 20th century. Known for his skill in teaching and oration, he has, however, not published much. Besides his doctoral dissertation — one that his Mennonite peers were not ready for — he has published a few occasional pamphlets (The Church and the Community, 1959, and To Drink or Not to Drink, 1981).

But beyond that, his published corpus is mostly limited to a few articles in magazines, journals and festschrifts, many of which had their genesis in public lectures.

Sum and Substance: Essays by J. Lawrence Burkholder remedies that situation, however modestly. Edited by Goshen College student Edward Zuercher, and published by GC's own Pinchpenny Press, this slim volume is a collection of JLB's Goshen College Bulletin essays written during his presidency at Goshen College. Sum and Substance is proof indeed that the reason Burkholder published so little is not for lack of talent, for in these essays he demonstrates an elegant and imaginative literary style.

This sampler also illustrates the breadth and depth of Burkholder's thought, ranging topically from music and sports to theology, philosophy and higher education. Even more it illustrates the extent to which Burkholder, in his own generation, has been on the frontier of Mennonite thought. His has been and continues to be an alert and penetrating mind fishing for truth in several streams of thought, an intellect grasping for a synthesis of many polarities in human experience and thought.

In these essays Burkholder discusses many polarities that are in tension — theology and philosophy, biblical theology and systematic theology, Christ and culture, radical discipleship and social responsibility, historical continuity and social change, freedom and determinism, time and eternity, being and non-being, nature and spirit, the prophetic and the priestly ministries of the church, the life of the mind and the "soul," western and eastern cultures, liberal arts and professional education. Yet he does not attempt to resolve them in an artificial synthesis.

The effect of Burkholder's thinking has been to introduce paradox into Mennonite thought processes — or to point out that paradox has been in our experience all along, even though we have tended to think categorically in "either-or" rather than "both-and" terms.

At the same time in his social analysis he has called attention to the ambiguities of our political and economic situation — to the point of making some of us squirm. We espouse a "Christ against culture" ethic, to use H. Richard Niebuhr's typology, yet economically at least we are very much a part of our culture. Ironically, Burkholder's prophetic vision has been that we need to learn how to be more than prophets over against society; we need to reflect on what it means to be responsible citizens, albeit, Christian ones, within society.

The essay that best illustrates the paradoxical nature of Burkholder's life and thought is probably "The Particular and the Universal" (p. 31). The editor reports that many claim this was his most important essay during his tenure as Goshen College president, a justifiable claim.

Philosophically, Burkholder has tried to join "Hegelian universalism" with "Kierkegaardian particularism." More autobiographically, this concern is reflected in his own professional pilgrimage. As he puts it, "My career has allowed me the privilege of teaching at Harvard University, a magnificent and worthy symbol of the universal, and the opportunity to serve Goshen College, a humble yet worthy symbol of the particular. What else could one want in the providence of God?" (p. 38). There's no argument here about whether Jerusalem has anything to do with Athens (or Goshen with Cambridge). Each has its own strengths and weaknesses and both need each other. The question is how two divergent views of reality and experiences can be held together in one comprehensive and coherent vision of the true, the good and the beautiful.

For years now Burkholder has been arguing that Mennonites need more than an implicit theology. Rather, we need an explicit theology, a systematic one that takes seriously our own tradition but also is comprehensive enough to look at reality as a whole in the light of transcendent reality. Though I once argued with Burkholder's perception of our corporate need, my own experience and reflection has led me to believe that he is correct. But who is to work on such a grandiose project? And who is up to the task intellectually?

Ironically, Burkholder is one of the few persons who could pull off this task, yet much of his professional life has been given to administration, from relief work in China to founding and chairing a new department at Harvard to presiding over Goshen College. Now that he's in "retirement," is it too much to wish for that Burkholder, along with fishing, playing tennis and flying ultra-light planes, might move beyond the suggestiveness of these essays and fill in some of the content of the theology he thinks we desperately need?

Choices

By Charles W. Ainlay

A well known line from Punch says: "You pays your money and you takes your choice." So it is in life.

Decisions, decisions. Frequently we lament the need to make choices in our personal and business lives. Perhaps that's because those choices are often irreversible and ultimately determine the course of our lives.

Among the crucial decisions we make are those regarding careers, marriage, friends and where we live. And sometimes we look back to consider how our lives might have been different, and we think about "the road not traveled."

Young people face decisions about which college or university to attend. There are, after all, hundreds to choose from, and if a high school graduate has the ability and the desire to attend college, it is usually possible to do so. As the competition for students becomes keener, institutions of higher learning that were characteristically sedate have become aggressive in their approaches to youth.

Adults make choices, too. Most of us are deluged with requests to support organizations and institutions with our time and money. Such choices are not easy because there are so many worthy organizations. Practical limitations, however, require that we make choices in such regards, selecting a few and rejecting many.

More than 25 years ago, a small group of Elkhart County business and professional persons accepted an invitation from Paul Mininger, who was then President of Goshen College, to form a President's Advisory Board.

The mission of the board was and continues to be to counsel with the president on college matters and to assist him in interpreting the college to the community. It is also a place to discuss community concerns about the college. The board has subsequently served presidents J. Lawrence Burkholder and Victor Stoltzfus. I have been privileged to serve on the board for all three presidents and have enjoyed the inspiration of their leadership.

The membership of the President's Advisory Board now numbers 25. These men and women of the Elkhart County community have backgrounds in business, the professions and community service. They are community leaders, with the consequent demands on their time.

Yet each of these board members has chosen to give the college time and advice, and they and their businesses contribute a significant amount of money to the college each year. Some have made major gifts for renovation of college buildings, facilities and grounds, and several have made substantial gifts for scholarships. And they have influenced many other business and professional people to join them in the financial support of Goshen College.

Their decisions to be committed to the college in these ways is all the more interesting because most of them are not members of the Mennonite Church.

Why, then, do they support Goshen College with their time, energy and money? I believe it is because the college has earned our gratitude, respect and support. We view Goshen College as a church-related, private institution that has attracted superior administrative leadership, an outstanding faculty and a student body of quality. Furthermore, we count it as our college in the sense that it is a part of this community and brings us both economic benefits and prestige.

So it is that we can all share in the pride that comes with the national recognition the college received last year in the U.S. News & World Report and USA Today who called Goshen College "one of the best small colleges in the United States." We basked in the same sunshine as did those serving at the college when the New York Times education editor, Edward Fiske, cited Goshen College as one of the 221 best buys in college education.

Our choice to serve and support Goshen College does not require that each of us agrees with every tenet of faith, doctrine, policy or conviction that the college, either officially or through its constituents, embraces. What it does require is respect for the sincerity of those who constitute the college community, and that we have in large measure.

All of us who believe in Goshen College and its program of Christian education need to make our voices heard. Although there is a need for other public and private options in higher education, we should openly praise those who choose Goshen College. When students make their choice about college, we want to be certain they know what it offers and the high regard in which we hold it.

The future of higher education in the United States is at a crossroads. The tensions created by the curtailment of government funds for student financial assistance and by the competition for students have led some colleges and universities to compromise their standards. One is reminded of a passage from the Wizard of Oz. When the Scarecrow requested intelligence, the Wizard said, "I cannot give you brains, but I can give you a diploma."

I am convinced Goshen College will never sacrifice the quality of its educational program or its moral principles for any reason. That's why we can make the choice of support for Goshen College and rejoice in our decision.

Goshen College Trivia

The Goshen College faculty, 1934-35

How many can you name?

GC trivia

How much do you know about the history of Goshen College? How much do you want to know?

Unlike the tests you took in college, the answers to questions in the GC Trivia game don't affect your grade point average; this game is just for fun.

The six categories are:

A. Administration
B. Teaching faculty
C. General information
D. Student life
E. Sports
F. Alumni

Here's how you play. If you are a true trivia buff, cut out the cards and use them with your game board from Trivial Pursuit™ — both games have six categories. You can use the picture questions for the questions that win the game. (Answers to the picture questions are on page 20.)

If you're just mildly interested in trivia games, you can cut out the cards and ask the questions to your friends who went to Goshen College without using the board. This method is a favorite of our family when we take a long trip in the car and it's not practical to move pieces on a game board and avoid on-coming traffic at the same time.

If you like Jeopardy-type trivia games, read the answers first and try to figure out what the questions are.

If you dislike trivia, you can use the cards as coloring blocks.

A special thanks to those who submitted questions: Roy Umble, Viola Good, Olive Wyse, Willard Smith, Ida Gross, Atlee Beechy, K.O. Nelson, Charlotte Croyle and Leonard Lehman. The prize for the most usable questions goes to Roy Umble.

If you discover inaccuracies in our data, please send in a correction, and we will publish it in a future issue of the Bulletin.

Letters from our readers

"We enjoyed the last Goshen College Bulletin; the excellence of the MHL certainly deserves recognition. And, of course, we always enjoy reading the alumni news.

"We do, however, have one question. Why was Steve Zimmerly's National Science Foundation graduate fellowship buried on page 20 in an insignificant article? If we are not mistaken, only top scholars receive awards like that — top scholars who graduate from top schools.

"Goshen has a lot to offer, and the quality shows in its graduates. However, people need to hear the news of that excellence. We would have liked to have seen more prominence given to a great achievement by a great graduate of a great school."

"Your 'Rambo issue' was excellent. The cover illustration, however, is a good example of the dearth of arresting or 'heroic' images by pacifists or nonresistants.

"I find it somewhat ironic that given the text's emphasis on heroes and images of compassion, the closest we can come to this visually, it seems, are in photos of Goshen College faculty members. And as such heroes, I'm delighted to affirm them."

Profile of an alumnus: Maurice Madison Burkholder '39

Excellence, integrity and heart

By Miriam Sieber Lind '42

Like many of us at Goshen College in 1934-1939, Maurice Burkholder was the first of his family to earn a college degree. Nudged toward GC by "Dee" Hostetler Roth '30, he planned to come to Goshen for two years and then transfer to a western university to study forestry. However, he hadn't bargained on a cluster of friends, mostly pre-meds, who insisted he take an aptitude test — and consequently changed his direction.

Not everyone at Goshen was as confident about his chances in medicine as those friends were. One GC official put it bluntly, "You can't make it. For med school you have to have money in the bank."

Now, nearly 50 years later, "Burkie" grins mischievously, "I probably owe my career in medicine to him. I had to prove he was wrong."

Burkholder did make it — without money in the bank to begin with or debts at the end. By 1943 his M.D. from Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., was in hand, and by 1948 he was ready to begin his practice of internal medicine on home turf in Boise, Idaho.

Meanwhile he had met Agnes Neuenschwander, a Mennonite from Berne, Ind., then working for NBC in Chicago. That fall (1942) within the parenthesis of three months, they had their first date, sailed through courtship and were married.

Of the Burkholders' six children, two are GC graduates: Ann '72, now studying philosophy at Oxford, and Ken '83, a musician in Boise. Mark is a history professor; Reed, a musician; Jim, a physician; and Amy, an executive assistant.

Burkholder's big professional crisis came after 20 years of practice, during which he served on the staff of St. Luke's (Episcopal) Hospital. There was serious talk of the need for a cancer diagnostic and treatment center — no such facility existed between Salt Lake and Portland — and it was Burkholder who stepped forward to begin the transition from talk to actual planning.

At considerable cost to a family burgeoning with teenagers, he literally "gave up" a year of his life (1968-69) to study at the noted M.C. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston, qualifying for a sub-specialty in medical oncology.

Three years later the Mountain States Tumor Institute (MSTI) was a reality, with diagnostic and therapeutic facilities comparable to any major medical center. As he had promised, Burkholder served as its acting medical director from 1968-1973, then — as planned — returned to his private practice of internal medicine, now with a subspecialty in medical oncology.

One among Burkholder's many additional "hats" is that of clinical professor of medicine at the University of Washington, of whose medical school the local (Boise) medical education program is a satellite. His record of other positions held, of universities, boards, commissions and committees served, attests to recognized excellence in his field.

But can the measure of a person be assessed solely, or even mainly, by the degree of professional excellence attained?

It is Burkholder's personal quality of what I call "heart" that embellishes and humanizes this competence and integrity. Colleagues and patients speak of him not only with singular respect, but with uncommon affection. He is the Friend, listening, empathizing and encouraging, as well as the Teacher who makes learning exciting.

Burkholder's avocations bring together a lifetime of lively interests. Every weekday, at the end of office hours — three o' clock sharp — he climbs into the Blazer and heads for The Ranch, 180 acres of land in the foothills of the Boise Mountains, about 20 miles from Boise.

As we sit talking near the small house, I realize that he is no absentee landlord. The Ranch reflects his own hard work and vision; his own brand of "TLC." Here the trees and shrubs he has planted and nurtured have grown into a miniature nature preserve. "It's my health club," he chuckles.

And here his insatiable yen for western history has filled two small sheds near the cabin with everything from bear traps to cream separators, railroad spikes to pharmaceutical containers, miners' lamps to anvils. Every artifact in this tiny museum complex has been meticulously cleaned, labeled and documented, just as one would expect of the GC lab assistant whose notebooks were enviable specimens of beauty and order.

Burkholder recalls Goshen with affection. "Some of the best years of my life . . . ," he remembers. The laugh lines deepen as, inevitably, names come back — professors Witmer and Miller, S. C. Yoder and with special affection, Lydia Shenk.

"As you know," he says, "we've been members of the Presbyterian Church in Boise for years. But I suppose my life and values mostly reflect my Mennonite background." He adds that Agnes' unusually strong Mennonite orientation has surely affected his own.

As we prepare to leave The Ranch, the family's one remaining horse stands at the fence twitching his nose for a bit of oats and a precise number — four — of sugar cubes. Burkholder then cracks a few tough nuts on the anvil and leaves them for the black pine squirrel. "Just to help him along a bit," he grins.

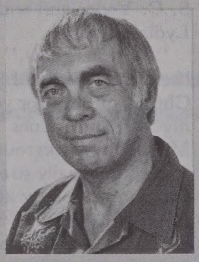
Ratzlaff ignores the labels



Do we require kids to go to school just so they can fail? Sometimes it seems that way, according to Vern Ratzlaff '54, teacher and educational consultant. The good news is we know how to change the situation.

Vern started a student "salvage operation" in 1981. He wanted to stop the practice of labeling children as academic misfits before they even got out of the third grade.

What he accomplished brings hope to parents everywhere who worry that their sons and daughters aren't learning the basics of reading, writing and math.

The program he started at Tuba City's (Ariz.) primary school is called "An Alternate Approach for the Struggling Child." Kids failing the third grade were assigned to his class.

Those kids were in trouble. They'd been getting miserable test scores and were failing reading, spelling and math. They'd already been labeled by the system as losers — and they weren't even 10 years old.

Vern ignored the labels.

"I knew that every child sent to me had the ability, the potential and the right to succeed," he said. "I treated them with strong doses of love and respect with lots of patience added. And our school principal supported me. That was vital to our success."

And he has been successful.

His former students are doing well in the fourth and higher grades. Some actually have been able to skip a grade because of their reading, math and writing skills.

Vern hopes to have his ideas published by January 1987. The tentative title for his manual is Success in Learning: An Idea Book for Parents, Teachers and Pupils. The package will also include a tape to be used for in-service work. Currently, Vern is presenting workshops using the philosophy along with slides and ideas from the manual.

Justice at the supermarket

While most books on food buying deal with how to get the most for your money, Marilyn Helmuth Voran's '52 new book shows who benefits and who gets hurt by our food purchasing habits.

Add Justice to Your Shopping List addresses the link between our food system and hungry people in Third-World countries. Marilyn believes Christians need to understand this connection, and she suggests some appropriate responses for those interested in justice issues related to food buying.

She helps us understand our involvement both as participants in, and victims of, a food system that has been called both the most destructive and the most productive the world has ever known.

Only through increased awareness will we begin to find ways to work for positive change, according to Marilyn.

The book was commissioned by the development education office of Mennonite Central Committee. Published by Herald Press, the 72-page book is $2.95 in the U.S. and $4.15 in Canada.

Marilyn and her husband Melvin live in Goshen and are the parents of three grown children. She is currently serving as coordinator for the Food/Hunger/-Justice Committee of the Mennonite Central Committee Great Lakes Region.

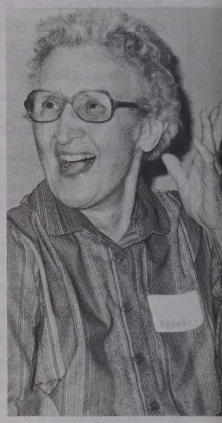
Alumni Weekend '86

Over 600 alumni traveled the miles to come to campus for the 1986 Alumni Weekend — and a good time was had by all.

Ten reunion classes met Saturday noon comparing notes on careers, children, grandchildren and other significant happenings. The Classes of 1936 (pictured on far right) and 1961 celebrated their 50th and 25th anniversaries.

Under 700 balloons, all came together Saturday evening for the Annual Alumni Banquet where alumni had a final opportunity to reminisce and renew friendships.



Smiles all around. Associate professor of nursing Fran Wenger, Alta Mae Erb '12 and Gladys Hostetler '31 revel in the warmth of renewed friendship. Below: Dwight McFadden '76 and Liz Hunsberger '66 catch up on happenings before the Alumni Banquet.

Admissions produces video

A new video brings Goshen College into the homes of prospective students and their parents.

The video gives a tour of the campus, while at the same time it answers questions about general studies, financial aid, international education, career counseling and campus activities.

"Many prospective students want to know what a campus is like before deciding to visit it or apply for admission," said admissions director Rich Gerig. "The video gives them a great opportunity to see and hear what we're about."

The video is available to prospective students through the admissions office in either Beta or VHS.

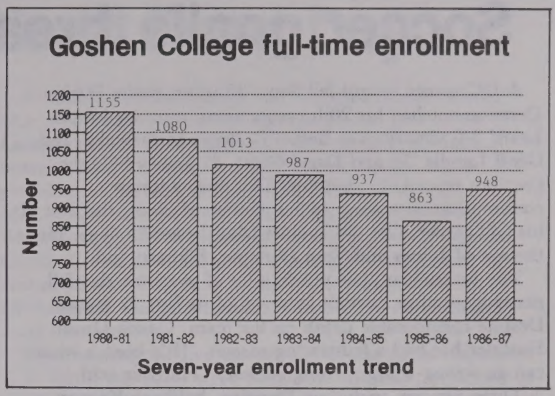
Goshen College halted a downward trend in enrollment and registered 85 more students this fall than in 1985, registrar John Nyce announced.

Overall, the student body increased from 863 in 1985 to 948 full-time students this year — an increase of 9.8 percent. The largest increase came in the freshmen class, which jumped from 169 in 1985 to 252 this fall — a 49.1 percent increase.

Mennonites still make up 75 percent of the student body. Maintaining such a high percentage is important, said admissions director Rich Gerig, because "it is central to our mission to educate young people who will be tomorrow's Mennonite leaders."

Gerig pointed out that "all enrollment factors went our way this year." Increases were charted in new freshmen, students re-admitted after a period away, transfer students and the strong retention of last year's students.



Student retention, a gauge for student satisfaction, increased from 79.3 percent in 1985 to 88.4 percent in 1986.

Total program review underway

As part of the year-old Goshen College strategic plan, GC is in the middle of a two-phase total educational review. The first phase, a cost reduction review, took place during the 1986 spring trimester. The goal was finding $250,000 to $450,000 in "core program cuts" from a total college budget of $10.6 million.

Despite an increase in enrollment this fall, the overall decrease in enrollment over the last 10 years made the cost-reduction review necessary, President Victor Stoltzfus said. GC has more academic departments and only slightly fewer faculty members now than it did 10 years ago when enrollment was about 20 percent higher.

"If we don't proceed with (budget cuts), we would have to do two very painful things: continue substandard salaries for the faculty and raise tuition costs beyond what students can afford," Stoltzfus said. "The only thing worse than cutting is not cutting."

The second phase, taking place during the 1986-87 school year, will include a complete re-evaluation of Goshen College's academic program. Each part of the program will be examined to see how it achieves specific learning outcomes and how it supports GC's emphases on church heritage, on the liberal arts and on peace and global understanding.

"This review gives us an opportunity to demonstrate that we are measuring up to what we promise, that our educational product is what we say it is," Stoltzfus added.

New advisory board for GC

Representatives from six Mennonite conferences met on campus Oct. 15-16 for the first session of the new Conference Advisory Board for Goshen College.

Willis Breckbill, conference minister for Indiana-Michigan Conference, chaired the meeting. Other conferences represented were Illinois, Ohio, New York State Fellowship, Atlantic Coast and Franconia.

The new board identified its purpose as advising Goshen College in directions to take for carrying out its mission and supporting the vision of Christian education in the church.

Vice chair for the advisory board is Donella Clemens, a member of the Franconia Conference executive committee. Secretary is Steve Ropp, Illinois Conference youth pastor.

The advisory board also met with the Goshen College Board of Overseers to discuss common concerns.

Sports roundup

Soccer goalie breaks shutout record

A GC soccer record fell Sept. 23 when goalie Darin Derstine notched his 20th career shutout in the Maple Leafs' 3-0 victory over Bethel College, Mishawaka, Ind. Geoff Landis '76 and Daryl Groff '81 jointly held the previous record, 19 shutouts. Derstine, a junior communication major, added another shutout, the 21st of his GC career, Oct. 16 against Manchester College. He is the son of James and Fern Derstine, Elkhart, Ind.

The soccer team has put in a lot of overtime this fall, playing overtime periods in seven of its first 12 games. Despite considerable depth on the team, Coach Dwain Hartzler has had a frustrating season. "It's been a what-can-go-wrong-will-go-wrong season," Hartzler said.

Three players, including Derstine, halfback Kenton Longenecker and striker Dan Liechty, did not play last year, and two other strong players, Gideon Berhanu and Doug Sharp, are Hesston College transfers.

Longenecker is a junior from New Holland, Pa., Liechty a junior from Goshen, Berhanu a junior from Ethiopia and Sharp a junior from Monument, Colo.

The tennis teams had substantial seasons despite some handicaps. Coach J. Harold Yoder's men's team ended the season with a 4-5 record, but placed fourth out of 12 teams at the NAIA District 21 Championships. Frank Hess, a junior from Goshen, placed second in District 21 singles play for the second consecutive year. Besides Hess, there were two seniors, two sophomores and four freshmen on the team.

The women's tennis team placed second in the Hoosier Conference for Women championships and fifth in the NAIA District 21 championships. In the HCW championships, the Maple Leafs advanced to the finals in six flights, but only Ingrid Hess, a freshman from Goshen, won her flight, No. 2 singles. Hess and the Leafs' No. 1 singles player, Ann Conrad, a junior from Perkasie, Pa., were named to the HCW All-Conference Team in singles and Conrad and her doubles partner, junior Margaret Fisher from Goshen, were named to the team in doubles. Coach Ruth Gunden lost the player she thought would be the No. 1 singles player to an injury before the season began.

Taking advantage of the new lights on the soccer field, Coach Pert Shetler's field hockey team played its first home night game Oct. 7 against Marion College. The field hockey team carried a 7-6 record into the NAIA District 21 tournament, which GC hosted Oct. 24-25. Strong performers this fall for field hockey have been junior Chris Landis, Lancaster, Pa.; freshman Michelle Miller, Akron, N.Y.; senior Kathy Blosser Plank, Goshen, and junior Becky Yoder, Goshen. Senior Annette Bontrager, Ashley, Mich., and junior Regina Miller, Mason, Mich., have played well in goal.

Interim volleyball Coach Denise Davault has a team that could be dubbed "New Faces of '86." Six of the 13 players are freshmen. In mid-October, the team had a 7-11 record after playing through a very tough schedule at the beginning of the season. Key players are senior Amy Schloneger, Orrville, Ohio, and junior Karen Yoder, Elkhart, Ind.

The Leafs won their pool at their own Goshen College Invitational but lost in the semifinals to the eventual winner.

Both men's and women's cross-country suffered this fall from a shortage of runners, but both men's Coach John Ingold and women's Coach Lyle Miller assembled dedicated teams. The top five men achieved their best times Oct. 17 at the Big State-Little State Meet, Terre Haute, Ind.

Open house set

Communication, nursing, art and jazz will be featured in Campus Open House events at Goshen College Nov. 21-22.

High school students and working registered nurses will find out more about the bachelor of science in nursing by observing classes, following nurses on the job and talking to nursing faculty in the "Discover Nursing" part of the weekend.

The Goshen College jazz band will also be featured in its first concert of the year. Now in its 10th season, the band has a new director, Dennis Friesen-Carper. Friesen-Carper joined the faculty this fall as music theory and conducting teacher as well as conductor for the orchestra and jazz band.

Art professors will work on individual evaluation of high school student art portfolios during the open house. Students attending the open house may submit paintings, drawings, photography and photos of sculpture and ceramics.

Students participating in any of the above events will stay in the college dormitories, hosted by current students. Meals will be provided in the college cafeteria. Recreational events are also planned.

For more information, contact Doug Liechty Caskey in the admissions office.

Wyse lectures mark World Food Day

World Food Day, an annual day of emphasis on the problems of feeding the world, was part of the annual Olive Wyse Honor Lecture Series Oct. 15-16. Roger Kennell, chair of Mennonite Central Committee Great Lakes, spoke Oct. 15 on "Food In Africa: Ironies and Contrasts."

Kennell, a Eureka, Ill., farmer, participated in the MCC Africa Food Study Tour of Ethiopia, Kenya, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

The African famine is not a natural phenomenon, Kennell said. Some African governments use food as a political weapon, and African nations must export desperately needed food to obtain hard currency to pay their debts.

However, Kennell returned from Africa "with a real sense of hope, not because of the food aid going into the countries, but because of the African people themselves," he said. Rather than rely on Western "experts," Africans are relying more on their own resourcefulness.

A national teleconference on "Hunger Amidst Plenty" Oct. 16, World Food Day, was the second part of the Wyse Lecture Series. Participating in a roundtable discussion beamed from Washington, D.C., were Barber Conable, president of the World Bank; Dr. Patricia Barnes-McConnell, director of the Michigan State University Bean/Cowpea Collaborative Research Support Program; Cecilia Lopez de Rodriguez, a Colombian economist and ambassador of Colombia to the Netherlands, and Dr. Muhammad Yunus, managing director of the Grameen Bank, Bangladesh.

After hearing the live discussion, a local panel responded to it. Panel members were Catherine Mumaw, professor of home economics; C. Franklin Bishop, professor emeritus of biology; Randal G. Gunden, assistant professor of business and economics; Dr. Betty Jo Smith-Roberts, a home economist and farmer from Syracuse, Ind., and Shirley B. Yoder, program coordinator for Church World Service.

Two faculty win in regional art show

Abner Hershberger, professor of art, and John Mishler, instructor in art, won prizes in the eighth annual Elkhart Juried Regional Exhibit at the Midwest Museum of American Art.

Hershberger won the D & M Glass Corp. $300 purchase award for "Field Formation #8" and the Bradley Vite Fine Art $300 purchase award for "Haitian Landscape." Mishler won "Best of Show," a $600 award, for his sculpture, "Sentinel," and the $500 Robert Weed Plywood Corp. purchase award for his sculpture, "Fantail."

Another of Mishler's sculptures, "Crown Sail," was accepted into the show.

More than 200 artists entered 460 works, of which 118 works by 84 artists were accepted. Other GC artists included in the show are Marvin Bartel, professor of art; Suzanne Bishop '85; Jeff Hochstedler, a senior art major; David Hubbard '83, and Dick Lehman '76.

Peace plays premiered

The world premiere of "Shadows," the winner of the Goshen College 1986 Peace Play Writing Contest, took place Oct. 3 during Alumni Weekend. Scott Memmer, Glendale, Calif., the author of "Shadows," attended the premiere and spoke to a theater arts class about playwriting. Also performed were the second-place play in the contest, "The Barbarians Are Coming," by Luigi Jannuzzi, and "The Interview," a work-in-progress by Douglas Liechty Caskey '82.

The 1984 winner of the Peace Play Writing Contest, "After the First Death," by Richard Stayton, has been published in German by Stefani Hunzinger Buhnenverlag Gmbh., Bad Homburg, West Germany. In February, 1987, the BBC will air a radio production of "After the First Death," directed by English playwright Harold Pinter.

Wholeness: a significant pursuit

By Victor Stoltzfus

The game "Trivial Pursuit" is built on two kinds of detailed information. Some facts are truly trifling, that is, both small and unimportant. Others are small, but unimportant only in isolation: when integrated with other facts in a web of meaning, they are enormously significant.

These vital micro-links are all around us. An infinitesimal difference in the arrangement of molecules can change a substance from one that cures to one that kills. In the developing world, a small pump made from cheap parts brings life-giving water to parched fields. A tiny balloon on the end of a catheter has improved the quality of life for thousands who suffer heart disease.

Like human beings, such tiny yet crucial parts of our reality are effective only when connected to other links. Harvey Potthoff has written, "The social character of reality is manifest on all levels — whether we are dealing with electrons, atoms, molecules, cells, organs, organisms, groups, communities, societies, or epochs of history . . . God is where the whole-making, whole-seeking is. Life is holy in its wholeness."

Sometimes we find it difficult to discern just how our experiences fit into that wholeness. During this fall's Alumni Weekend my class of 1956 celebrated its 30-year reunion. We've accomplished some things and have absorbed our share of life's bruises. When one classmate used the euphemism "growth experiences," another one blurted out, "You're talking about pain, aren't you?"

Even the (nonmalicious) college prank, fondly remembered decades later, is a meaningful part of our total college memories, a memory marker for all the good days we spent together. "Giving it" and "taking it" on a dormitory floor taught us that the embarrassing side of life punctures egos but is not fatal among friends. Regaining balance after funny and not-so-funny shocks in life is vital to psychological wholeness.

The Holy Scriptures affirm Potthoff's belief that "Life is holy in its wholeness." They record not just the grand story of God at work in history, but also the small, embarrassing stories of the flawed humans through whom God works. We read both detailed genealogies ("Abraham begat Isaac; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat Judas and his brethren . . . etc. etc.") and accounts of the all-too-familiar failures of discipline and faith that plague God's people.

However, when its people and events come together in a story which places our own failures and finer moments in a providential context, the Bible becomes an epic of grace and faith. Abraham's faith inspires ours. Sarah's obedience and hope sustains us. God's unilateral disarmament of Himself on the cross gives us new hope for peace and wholeness in history.

All areas of learning require the integration of small things (the parts) into larger wholes of meaning. No single lifetime is enough to get it all together for either faith or ordinary learning. The task is complicated by the fact that many of the larger political, economic and even cultural systems that link societies together are in disarray. East and West now share global social problems — family decay, addiction, hunger, the arms race, unemployment and many others.

Christian educators face the challenge of educating students for such integration with an advantage, God's vision of what humans can be and God's promise of salvation for His people. In four critical years a Christian college selects and teaches a small fraction of what is known about God, nature and human nature. We nurture skills with words, numbers, reasoning, valuing, esthetic appreciation, physical fitness, intercultural understanding and more.

However, the Christian institution also faces an issue state-supported institutions do not, the issue of the college's integrity. For a Christian college, accountability transcends state-college concerns of reporting satisfactory results merely to major donors or to a legislature. There must be integrity — coherence — between what the college mission says we do and what actually happens on campus and throughout the world. Our definition of institutional wholeness is broader, deeper and higher.

This year we begin a college self-study of our whole educational program, of not only what is learned for academic credit but also all the informal learning that happens in dormitories, games, concerts, lectures, chapels, convocations and student groups. Our own quest for integrity and excellence, not a request by an outside accrediting agency, prompted this review. We'll reflect on everything from our lofty institutional ideals to shoe-leather practicalities (but not trivialities). The ideal result would be a statement of student learning outcomes (competencies) that expresses our mission statement and is based in academic and extracurricular programs. This year, as always, Goshen College is on a significant pursuit.
